

B.C.

BS 2555 .A5 1898

Alexander, William, abp. of Armagh, 1824-1911.

The leading ideas of the gospels

THE LEADING IDEAS OF THE GOSPELS

THE LEADING IDEAS OF THE GOSPELS

BY WILLIAM ALEXANDER, D.D.,
D.C.L. OXON, LL.D. DUBLIN

BRASENOSE COLLEGE, OXFORD, ARCHBISHOP OF ARMAGH, AND PRIMATE OF ALL IRELAND

Circa thema generale
Habet quisque speciale
Styli privilegium.
ADAM DE S. VICTOR. Ci. De SS. Evangelistis

ἡ πόλις τετράγωνος κεῖται.
Apoc. xxi. 16

THIRD EDITION

London
MACMILLAN AND CO., LIMITED
NEW YORK: THE MACMILLAN COMPANY
1898

The Right of Translation and Reproduction is Reserved

2555
A5
1896

First Edition printed 1872. Second Edition, 1892. Third Edition, 1898.

RICHARD CLAY & SONS, LIMITED, LONDON & BUNGAY.

Dedication.

TO

MY SON AND DAUGHTER-IN-LAW

CECIL JOHN FRANCIS AND EVA MACMURROUGH
ALEXANDER

UNDER WHOSE HAPPY ROOF AT ARRAGHSLEA

THIS WORK

IN ITS PRESENT FORM

WAS BEGUN ;—

TO

MY BROTHER-IN-LAW AND SISTER

MAXIMILIAN HAMMOND AND MATILDA DALISON

IN WHOSE DELIGHTFUL HOME

AT HAMPTONS

IT WAS FINISHED.

HIS quadrigis deportatur
Mundo Deus, sublimatur
Istis arca vectibus ;
Paradisi haec fluenta
Nova pluunt sacramenta
Quae irrorant gentibus.

Non est domus ruitura
Hâc subnixa quadraturâ,
Haec est domus Domini ;
Gloriemur in hâc domo,
Quâ beaté vivit homo
Deo junctus homini.
Amen.

PREFACE TO SECOND EDITION

THIS volume, in its present shape, is rather a new book than a new edition.

The germ from which it grew was originally presented to the public in some sermons delivered before the University of Oxford in 1870-71 by the author as Select Preacher. The conception which linked the series of discourses together was not, at the time, very familiar to English readers ; and the volume appeared to excite a certain degree of interest.

It has now been out of print for a few years. As the writer hears that it is still asked for, he gladly avails himself of an opportunity to amend, recast, and enlarge it.

Such correction and amplification was greatly needed for several reasons.

1. The original book was necessarily put together in some haste. The author felt that he had laid hold of a sound conception, fruitful in application to the true exposition of the Gospels ; but he had not leisure at the time to follow it out with sufficient fulness—nor, indeed, do sermons for oral delivery readily admit of much detail. For many years, however, he has constantly kept the Leading Ideas of the evangelists in view in his study of the Gospels, and applied them to several passages which had escaped, not only his own first investigations, but, as far as he knows, the observation of critics generally. In short, he has laboured to teach himself, and hopes that he may, therefore, succeed in teaching some others.

2. Moreover, the writer cannot conceal from himself that there were faults in the tone of his little volume of sermons. They were not only too sermonizing for a subject which required didactic treatment, but even the sermonizing (true, as he believes, in itself) was set on a wrong key and thrust into a wrong place.

The overthrow of the Irish Establishment had affected the preacher of the sermons deeply. It tinged all objects around him with a certain strong and lurid light. The subsequent admission of the laity, not only to a co-ordinate part in general ecclesiastical legislation (to which he was always favourable), but to the right even of initiative in solemn doctrinal questions, filled him with forebodings. The crash of the revolution from without was followed by the rumbling of an explosion from within. He thought it right to sound an alarm as loudly as he could ; and his voice was, perhaps, not quite unheard.

But as the author, become his own critic, went over his volume when he could look back upon it as something remote and almost external to himself, his pencil ran through all passages of the kind. Not only are polemics a growth which does not flourish in the frigid air of age ; not only is the controversial epigram which pleased us in middle life a thing in which we find cause for repentance as we move onward from the din of the strife towards the silence of eternity—temporary controversies, however important in their own place, are better absent from our dealings with those immortal pages where Christ is all and in all. In the Gospels He is in His holy temple. We should keep silence before Him. To read their meaning should be our only object.

The writer has provided an "Occam's razor"¹ for himself by the simple expedient of abolishing the hortatory form of the sermon. The calmer and more progressive method of a regular didactic treatise enables him (he hopes) to do more justice to a theory which throws light upon the one four-fold record of the Person and work of the Incarnate Lord.

¹ "Entia non multiplicanda esse præter necessitatem."

3. In addition to revision of the original matter, several important additions have been made. (a) The conception of Leading Ideas in the Gospels has been carefully guarded, and discriminated from the extravagant application of it which might make the evangelists appear to be romantic ideologists. (b) The study of St. Luke's Gospel has been specially enlarged, and a principle of division adopted (from the circumstances of his life ; from his special training ; from his natural endowments) which seems suited for dealing with his Leading Ideas. The subject of St. Luke's alleged Ebionitism has also been carefully examined. (c) The most sacred portion of a narrative where all is sacred—the record of the Passion—has been elucidated by the Leading Ideas of the evangelists. (d) A synopsis has been prefixed, and an index appended.¹

¹ Indexes were at one time prefixed to many English books. The advantage of this plan did not escape Shakespeare. He places his observations upon it (curiously out of place chronologically and in place psychologically) in the mouth of Nestor.

. . . In such indexes, although small pricks
To their subsequent volumes, there is seen
The baby figure of the giant mass
Of things to come at large.

Troilus and Cressida. (Act i. Sc. iii.)

It is believed that very much of the four Gospels will thus receive more or less expository light.

It only remains to say that the writer has largely worked up his materials for himself. Indeed (with one important exception) he scarcely knew where to look for much assistance. But there are three works to which he must express distinct obligations. The first is the beautiful book of Lange,¹ to which his debt is considerable. The second is Riggenschach's Life of the Lord Jesus in his useful remarks upon the "end and plan" of the evangelists.² The third, and in some respects most valuable, is the first volume of the New Testament, by the late holy and learned Bishop of Lincoln, and especially the Prefaces to the Gospels (above all that to St. Luke) with their stores of patristic learning and saintly insight.

¹ "The Life of Christ, by J. P. Lange, D.D., Professor of Divinity in the University of Bonn." Four volumes (English translation. T. and T. Clark). The fourth volume is, indeed, a treatise on the four gospels as symbolised by the ox, lion, man, and eagle. Those who are fond of such pursuits can easily track the present writer in the snow of Lange, by comparing his discussions on the Leading Ideas of the narrative of the Passion with Lange. Life of Christ, vol. iv. 98, 130, 175, 183, 300, 308, 451; also vol. ii. 221, 330.

² "Vie du Seigneur Jésus. Leçons Publiques, par D. J. Riggenschach, Professeur de Théologie, Bâle. Traduit de l'Allemand, par G. Steinheil." pp. 1-89.

The author's acknowledgments are due to the Rev. W. K. Hobart, LL.D., for a remarkable list of medical words in the Epistle to the Hebrews. A young theologian of promise, Mr. J. T. S. Stopford, B.A., T.C.D., has assisted him in carrying his work through the Press, and supplied a useful Index.

May this book be of service to students of the Gospels, and aid some souls to know Christ a little better.

WILLIAM DERRY AND RAPHOE.

HAMPTONS, TUNBRIDGE,
August 8, 1891.

PREFACE TO THIRD EDITION

THE present edition has been carefully revised and corrected. A few additions of some importance have been introduced.

WILLIAM ARMAGH.

April 7, 1898.

CONTENTS

I

SUBJECT—THE GOSPELS ARE PERVADED BY LEADING IDEAS

I

	PAGE
The Gospels defined	1-3

They are not—

(a) Regular and complete biographies	1
--	---

Hence : Facts—even important facts—unmentioned by any evangelist form no objection	2
---	---

(b) Nor are the Gospels miscellaneous collections of pious anecdotes, discourses, &c.	3
---	---

They are therefore—

(c) Selections from a vast treasury of recollections, arranged, according to a method of their own, round certain Leading Ideas	3
---	---

II

The New Testament itself supplies one important evidence of the adoption of this method	3
One specimen of a primitive Gospel. Acts x. 34-44 . . .	4

	PAGE
Summary of the four great Leading Ideas of the present Gospels in that passage: (1) Matthew; (2) Mark; (3) Luke; (4) John	6-11

III

The symbols of Ezekiel's vision (Ezekiel i. 4-28)	12
In what sense they may be transferred to the Gospels	13-15
Even if this view is rejected as a legitimate interpretation , the widespread application of the cherubic symbols to the four Gospels proves that the conception of Leading Ideas in the Evangelists was accepted by ancient Christianity	15

IV

(a) Analogies to the employment of Leading Ideas—
1. Delineations by Plato and Xenophon of Socrates	16
2. Archbishop Laud in Heylin's life and in his own Diary	17
(b) A life constructed according to Leading Ideas most suitable to "informal Memoirs," and such Memoirs best adapted for a life of Jesus	17
The style of the Evangelists not the cause of the success of their work	18

II

THE LEADING IDEAS OF ST. MATTHEW'S GOSPEL

I

Illustration of the spirit of St. Matthew's Gospel from the Epistle of St. Ignatius to the Philadelphians	20
The first Gospel is pervaded by two Leading Ideas—

CONTENTS

xv

	PAGE
1. It is the Gospel of the Discourses of Jesus	21
How do we know that we have an accurate report of them?	22
Answer for Christians in St. John xiv. 26	22
2. St. Matthew's Gospel is the Gospel of true, as opposed to false Judaism ; its motto is in its first verse	23
(a) This Idea traced in the opening chapters—
In the Sermon on the Mount	26
In chapters viii. and ix. (especially viii. 2-5)	26
Development of the downward course of Judaism, St. Matthew xxiii. 38, 39 ; xxiv. 1	29-31
Consummation of the fall of Judaism in the Crucifixion ; emphasis upon the bribery of the soldiers by the chief priests and elders (St. Matthew xxviii. 11-16)	31
Judaism finally superseded by the Apostolic commission (St. Matthew xxviii. 16-20)	33-34

II

This view of the Leading Ideas of St. Matthew's Gospel applied—

1. Theoretically, to the origin of the Gospels	34-41
[Particular historical incidents in the Gospels referred to in the Epistles.]
To establish the existence of Leading Ideas in a Gospel establishes unity of authorship	41
Additional proof of this in characteristic subsidiary traits, St. Matthew's "infantine τότε ," and repeated ἰδοὺ	42
2. This view of the Leading Ideas of St. Matthew's Gospel applied practically	43-47
(a) Eternal Freshness of the first Gospel	43
In what sense anti-hierarchical	44

	PAGE
(b) Its first verse leads us to a conception of the eternal office of our Lord	45
Bearing upon the use of the Old Testament, and the in- fallibility of Christ's interpretation of it	46
NOTE 1.—The sobriety of the record of the Epiphany in St. Matthew	48-49
NOTE 2.—Dreams in St. Matthew's Gospel	50

III

THE LEADING IDEAS OF ST. MARK'S GOSPEL

I

St. Mark's main characteristics—

1. Vividness 51

Elements of this—

[Present tense ; use of double negative ; dramatic language ; life-like details ; personal traits of our Lord ; brief notes of His feelings ; preservation of preeminent grandeur of the central Figure] . . . 52-57

2. Petrine influence 57-59

(a) Minute pieces of information, presumably from St. Peter 58

(b) Coincidence of the general line and purpose of the second Gospel with the "primitive" Petrine Gospel. (Acts x.
37, 38 ; St. Mark i. 2, 11, 14) 58

II

These characteristics bring out the Leading Ideas and primary object of St. Mark—

CONTENTS

xvii

	PAGE
1. His Leading Ideas	60-61
(a) Jesus as Lord of the human heart	60
(b) His life upon earth a life of alternate rest and toil	61
2. St. Mark's primary object ; his Gospel addressed to the Latin element in humanity ; development of this conception	62-65

III

St. Mark not merely an abbreviator of St. Matthew	65
1. Special sayings of Jesus which the Church would lose without St. Mark	66-68
2. Special incidents	68-70
3. General views, and superior grasp of certain incidents recorded by one or more of the synoptics. [Impression of the life of Jesus upon earth as a life of toil (St. Mark i. 21-39. Cf. St. Luke iv. 33-44). Peculiar force in one particular incident (St. Mark x. 17-32).] . . .	70-72

IV

Common "corpuscula" in the synoptics	73
How to be accounted for	73-76

V

Lessons—

1. Plain historical simplicity	77
2. Key in St. Mark to the view of the Gospel held by the Catholic Church	77-82

IV

THE LEADING IDEAS OF ST. LUKE'S GOSPEL

A

FROM THE CIRCUMSTANCES OF HIS LIFE

I

	PAGE
What we know of St. Luke	83-84
What we may probably conjecture	85
In what sense he may have been a disciple of Jesus	86
Inferences from St. Luke xxiv. 13-36. [See also Note B at the end of the volume, p. 297]	81-88

II

Leading Ideas which such a life as that of Jesus might naturally suggest to such a man as St. Luke	89
The Saviour—one belonging to the most strikingly individ- ualized race—the type of the most universalized humanity	89
This characteristic naturally attractive to a writer of St. Luke's antecedents	91
Hence—
1. One of his Leading Ideas is the mission of Jesus as universal , the Gospel as the Gospel of humanity , the Saviour as the Saviour of the world	91-94
2. Another Leading Idea is the Pauline conception of grace and forgiveness	95-96
Pauline thought and influence	96
Two subsections of these Leading Ideas	97
(a) The call of the Gentiles implies the fall of Jerusalem . .	97

CONTENTS

xix

	PAGE
(b) The prominence assigned to Prayer as in its spiritual intensity unknown to the Gentiles	98
One Leading Idea of St. Luke the enforcement of Prayer by example and precept	99

III

Lessons—

1. Hope for missionary work 100-101
2. Hope for the fallen and those who are failures 101-102

IV

THE LEADING IDEAS OF ST. LUKE'S GOSPEL

B

FROM HIS SPECIAL TRAINING

I

St. Luke a physician 103

Hence—

1. Leading Idea of medical side of miracles 104-105
 2. Leading Idea of distinction of possession from disease . . . 106
 3. As the physician is so often a psychologist 107
- St. Luke the psychological Evangelist 108

Hence Leading Ideas of his Gospel are—

- (a) Single characters ; groups or pairs of characters ; temperaments ; female characters ; co-existences of apparently contradictory feelings 109-112
 - (b) Particularly what woman did for Jesus, and Jesus for woman 113-116
- The Virgin-Mother in St. Luke and St. Matthew . 113-114

	PAGE
(c) The application of psychology to the character of Christ a Leading Idea of St. Luke	116
1. His successive stages of human development	117
2. Effect of Prayer upon Him ; difficulties arising from the very refinement of the psychological penetration of St. Luke. [See Note C, p. 299]	117-119
The "passive side" of the Saviour's character ; His "silent life" ; a Leading Idea of St. Luke	119-121

II

Lessons—

1. Bearing of our training on our spiritual life	121
2. Christianity adapted to the varieties of human nature	122-123
NOTE A.—The mode of our Lord's miracles of healing	124-125
NOTE B.—Modern illustrations of demoniacal possession	125-127
NOTE C.—Theory of temperaments	127

IV

THE LEADING IDEAS OF ST. LUKE'S GOSPEL

C

FROM HIS NATURAL ENDOWMENTS

The sense of beauty ; definition of beauty ; moral beauty.

I

The conception of beauty in the soul and actions of Jesus ; a Leading Idea of the third Evangelist	128-129
St. Luke's the painter's Gospel	130-132
The idyll of the beginning and of the end	132-134

II

PAGE

Two adjuncts of this Leading Idea—

1. St. Luke's the Gospel of the holy Angels 135-140
 Peculiarly suitable to Hellenic wants. [See Additional Note B at the end of the volume, p. 325] 135-137
 Instances—
2. St. Luke's the Gospel of poetry 140-144
 Rhythmic bursts 140
- Different ideas of the personal appearance of the Son of Man 141-144

III

Inference—

- Such a Gospel necessarily creates a religion of beauty 144
- Importance of cultivating this side of the Gospel; spiritual history of M. Scherer 145
- Conclusion 146-147

IV

THE LEADING IDEAS OF ST. LUKE'S GOSPEL

D

IN THE NARRATIVE OF THE INCARNATION

I

- One Leading Idea of this Narrative that the Incarnation is real 148-150
1. Its physiological reality fitly indicated by the physician-evangelist 151-153
 - Successive stages of development of the Divine Child clearly noted 153

	PAGE
2. Its historical reality	154
General character of St. Luke as a grave historian confirms his account of the Incarnation	154-156
II
The Incarnation universal in its idea and consequences; second Leading Idea	156-158
III
The Incarnation joyful ; third Leading Idea	158
IV
The Incarnation beautiful ; fourth Leading Idea	158
Idyllic surroundings	159
Canticles	159-161
[The Canticles are not mythical, but exactly correspond to the contexture of circumstances in which they are placed.]
Angelic appearances	162
Summary	162-163

IV

THE LEADING IDEAS OF ST. LUKE'S GOSPEL

E

THE DANGER OF RICHES AND THE COMPENSATIONS OF POVERTY

Starting-point from the incident (xviii. 18-31).

I

	PAGE
Danger of money and property ; a Leading Idea of the third Gospel	164
Incident in xviii. 18-31 discussed	165-166
St. Luke's version of the Sermon on the Mount (vi. 20, 21-24, 25). Parable of the rich man and Lazarus (xvi. 19-31) .	167

II

Correlative Leading Idea ; the compensations of poverty ; passages quoted	168
This Idea insufficiently proclaimed	168
Two great dangers of money-making and money-holding .	169-171

III

St. Luke's Leading Idea not communistic or Ebionite . . .	171
1. Money dangerous to the poor as well as to the rich . .	172-173
2. Riches not to be repudiated , but rightly used (xvi. 9) .	173-174
3. Danger of isolating texts	174
St. Luke's Church History on this subject (Acts iv. 32 ; v. 4 ; xi. 29, 30 ; xx. 12)	175
Witness and lesson of the Catacombs	176

IV

We must not explain away Christ's individualizing work, and supreme claims upon the soul	PAGE 177-179
NOTE A.—M. Renan upon alleged socialistic tendencies of the Hebrew language	180-181

V

THE LEADING IDEAS OF ST. JOHN'S GOSPEL

A

THE DIVINE GLORY OF CHRIST IN THE INCARNATION; THE SPIRITUAL ESSENCE OF THE MIRACLES; THE DISCOURSES; THE SACRAMENTS

I

The Prologue (St. John i. 1-14) = Christ's Divine Glory in the Incarnation	182-183
Necessity for a theory of a great life ¹	183
St. John's Leading Idea = his theory of Christ's Person and Nature	184
The Word	185-186
The fact of the Incarnation is recorded by St. Matthew and St. Luke, assumed by Mark	187
The Idea which vitalizes the fact is dominant in St. John . . .	187

II

Other Leading Ideas of St. John—
1. His Leading Idea in the Miracles	188-192
They are typical and teach	191

¹ Observe the qualification in the note, p. 184.

	PAGE
2. His Leading Ideas in the Discourses	192-203
No fully developed parables recorded by him	193
Difficulties from their omission considered	194-195
The Leading Idea of the Discourses preserved by him is the higher and more heavenly spirituality with which his own nature had most affinity	200

III

3. His Leading Idea in the Sacraments	203-208
Their institution omitted. Why?	204
(a) Already sufficiently recorded, and their observation practically secured	204
(b) He shows the Church their high and ideal side	204
Water a Leading Idea of his Gospel	206-208
NOTE A.—Jesus wrote no book	209-211

V

THE LEADING IDEAS OF ST. JOHN'S GOSPEL

B

IN DELINEATION OF CHARACTER; IN THE GROWTH OF BELIEF AND UNBELIEF; IN RECORDING WITNESS TO CHRIST

I

A Leading Idea of St. John is the self-delineation of character in its own words ¹	212-214
Instances—
Character of Christ in St. John	214
Character of the Baptist	215-219
St. John's pictures idealized	220

See infra B, n. 1.

II

	PAGE
1. The growth of belief and unbelief a Leading Idea of St. John	221-222
Three miracles selected for this purpose	221
Chapters v.-vi.
2. Witness to Christ a Leading Idea	222-232
Instances—
Life-crisis cries of witness	223
Different witnesses to Christ	224-232
(a) Human	224
(b) Divine	225
(c) Miracles	227-229
(d) Himself	229-232
NOTE A.—Minute verisimilitudes	233-235
NOTE B.—Our Lord's human knowledge	235-236

VI

*THE LEADING IDEAS OF THE EVANGELISTS IN
THE NARRATIVE OF THE PASSION*

A.—ST. MATTHEW

Leading Idea = True Judaism and High-Priest over against the false	238
Judgment by the Jews determines that by the heathen	239
Treason and suicide of Judas typical of Judaism	239

CONTENTS

xxvii

	PAGE
Contrast of Pilate's wife with chief-priests and elders (xxvii. 19, 20)	240
Self-malediction of the people.	241
The Roman mockery; the fulfilment of prophecy	242-244
Leading Idea—Jesus in His crucifixion; the Messiah of the Israel of God; the Passion in the light of the Old Testament.	244

VI

THE LEADING IDEAS OF THE EVANGELISTS IN THE NARRATIVE OF THE PASSION

B.—ST. MARK

I

His vividness brings out his Leading Idea of the grandeur of Jesus	246
Two contrasts of human weakness to that victorious strength: (a) The young man, probably St. Mark himself; (b) St. Peter. Christ's majesty in the Prætorium	246-248

II

The one last word in St. Matthew and St. Mark.	249
It must have been spoken	249
Key to its interpretation supplied by the Creed	251
Any other interpretation discrowns Jesus	252
This shows that in His death He (a) "bore the punishment of sin"; (b) "tasted death for every man"	253

	PAGE
This one last word in St. Matthew and St. Mark brings out their respective Leading Ideas—
(1) In St. Matthew it claims Psalm xxii. as His. (2) In St. Mark it shows Him heroic and victorious in death, and leads to proof that He is the Son of God	254

VI

*THE LEADING IDEAS OF THE EVANGELISTS IN
THE NARRATIVE OF THE PASSION*

C.—ST. LUKE

His Narrative of the Passion pervaded by general Leading Ideas of his Gospel	255
Instances—
Three last words peculiar to him—
1. Beauty of pardoning tenderness (xxiii. 34)	256
2. Beauty of pardoning power (xxiii. 43)	257
Leading Idea of triumphant grace	257
In it an assurance, a promise, a revelation of the unseen world. (The last especially referred to one of his Leading Ideas.)
3. The seventh of the last words (xxiii. 46)	261
Beauty perfected in perfect calmness	261

VI

THE LEADING IDEAS OF THE EVANGELISTS IN
THE NARRATIVE OF THE PASSION

D.—ST. JOHN

	PAGE
His Leading Idea the Passion in its Divine Glory	262

I

The Divine Glory of His self-possession	262
Brought out by xviii. 3-7	263

II

Divine Glory of His royalty	263
Ecce Homo! St. John xix. 5	264
Awe of Pilate, ibid. 8, 9	264
The judgment of the judges, v. 11	264

III

Divine Glory of the three last words peculiar to St.
John—

I. Divine Glory of perfect natural affection, xix. 25-28 . .	265
Appeal from M. Renan to the human heart : contrast with Socrates	265-266
Divine preciousness of the legacies of Jesus from the Cross—
To Mary	266
To John	266
To the Church, in providing for the theology of the Incarna- tion	267

	PAGE
2. Divine Glory in perfect human suffering	268
(a) Reality of flesh from reality of pain	268
(b) Divine knowledge of prophecy	270
Sacredness of Old Testament	270
(c) Divine Glory of His human character	271
Truly human—
In complying with the requirements of the body	271
In appealing to human sympathy	272
Some effect produced in awaking pity and awe	273
3. Divine Glory of His knowledge of the worth of His life and mission. What is finished?	275
(a) His life	275
(b) Scripture with requirements, types, sufferings, promises. [Witness of human language ; part of one Leading Idea of the Gospel, xix. 19, 20].	277

IV

The fourfold delineation of Jesus in the Leading Ideas of the Evangelists meets the four leading wants and aspirations of humanity	280
--	-----

VII

QUALIFICATIONS AND CONCLUSIONS

I

Qualification	282
No Leading Idea of one Evangelist altogether wanting in one or more of the others	282-284

II

PAGE

Examples—

Use of Leading Ideas illustrated by an incident common, in part at least, to all four	285-288
---	---------

III

Three general inferences—

A

Bearing of Leading Ideas upon our view of Jesus	288
---	-----

B

Bearing of Leading Ideas upon our view of the language of the Gospels	288
Their inspiration does not involve mechanical and literal exactitude	289
It does involve all that is sufficient for the end contemplated by the Spirit	289

C

Bearing of Leading Ideas upon the origin of the Gospels	294-295
NOTE A.—Cardinal Newman on verbal inspiration	296-297
NOTE B.—St. Luke xxiv. 13-36 (see pp. 86-88)	297-298
NOTE C.—St. Luke ii. 52 (see p. 117)	299-301

ADDITIONAL NOTES

NOTE A.—Indications of the style and tone of St. Luke in the Epistle to the Hebrews	302-324
NOTE B.—Cardinal Newman on the effect of a first reading of St. Luke's Gospel upon a Greek mind	325-328
INDEX	329

THE LEADING IDEAS OF THE GOSPELS

I

THERE ARE LEADING IDEAS OF THE GOSPELS

“As for the likeness of their faces, they four had the face of a man, and the face of a lion, on the right side : and they four had the face of an ox on the left side ; they four also had the face of an eagle.”—EZEKIEL i. 10.

I

VIEWED from their human and literary side, the Gospels may be defined as informal memoirs of the earthly life of our Lord Jesus Christ—written from, and pervaded by, certain great Leading Ideas. Indeed, a consideration of their character and purpose will show that no other conception is tenable.

For there are two things which the Gospels assuredly are not.

(a) They are as far as possible from being regular biographies in the modern sense. They have neither consecutive fulness of detail, nor complete chronological exactitude. What is very important, they make no attempt at developing the gradual evolution of a lofty thought and career. Indeed they could not do this—the most interesting part of a great man's life—without coming into conflict with the central dogma which renders Christ's earthly career the most important part of the history of the human race. From hence it follows that to demand absolute completeness from an evangelist, is to misunderstand the very nature and condition of his work.

One important corollary follows from this.

We have no right to charge any evangelist with ignorance of a fact, however important, because he may happen not to mention it articulately. Thus we are not warranted in asserting that St. John "knew nothing of the birth in Bethlehem,"¹ or that the synoptics were unacquainted with the resurrection of Lazarus, because St. John does not distinctly record the one event, or because the three do not appear to refer to the other. The objection comes from critics who have forgotten, or who never possessed the very definition of a Gospel. He who has no right to the premiss—"an evangelist is to be put out of court who does not record every important event"—has no right to its conclusion.

¹ To those who know the method of St. John's irony, stating as proof positive the very objection which to adversaries seemed fatal, the passage St. John viii. 41, 42, will be decisive upon this point.

(b) If the Gospels are not, on the one hand, regular biographies, neither, on the other hand, are they mere collections of pious anecdotes or great sayings, strung together at random.¹

There was lodged in the memory of the original Apostles and disciples a treasury of recollections. The works, the discourses, the Personality of Jesus Christ, were there in abundant fulness. As time passed, and a written record of those momentous years became necessary, the evangelists selected such actions and sayings as brought out certain aspects of the Lord's ministry, purpose, character, and teaching. Each Gospel is arranged round one centre, or at least round a few central points. This particular aspect, this grouping point or principle of selection, is the Leading Idea of the evangelist.

The Gospels, then, are "informal memoirs" or the earthly life of Jesus pervaded by certain Leading Ideas.

II

In the Acts of the Apostles we find one important indication of the existence of the very Leading Ideas which it is the object of this work to develop in an original draft of the Gospel history by the chief of its earliest witnesses. At least a quarter of a century before any of our present Gospels was committed to writing, apostolic thought and teaching upon the earthly life of the Saviour assumed that the whole field was traversed by four principal Leading Ideas.

¹ Cp. Life and Letters of Dean Stanley, vol. ii. p. 342, where, in an account of an interview between Stanley and Newman, the latter is quoted as saying: "But then I seem to myself to see this same compilatory character (i.e. as in the O. T.) in the Gospels; not a regular history, but biographical anecdotes strung together."

The fullest specimen of a "primitive Gospel" which the Church now possesses, is that which was spoken by St. Peter in his discourse to Cornelius and his company.¹ We there find the four great lines of which we have spoken.

We may take St. Peter's words in the order most natural to us.

1. The Saviour whom the Apostle preached was the Messiah attested by Hebrew prophecy. "To Him give all the prophets witness."²

2. The earthly life of Jesus was a "short, bright, resistless course"—resistless in the native charm of its enthusiastic benevolence. If brief in the measurement of time, it is permanent in its effect upon humanity. So far as its character from this point of view can be grasped in human language, it may be compressed into two words,— "He passed through, doing good."³

¹ Acts x. 34-44.

² Acts x. 43.

³ διήλθεν εὐεργετῶν. Acts x. 38. Surely both here and Acts xx. 25 (R.V.) "went about" is not a happy rendering. The original meaning must be = "to go, or pass right through"; and with an accusative it is used for "passing through, and so reaching a goal of any kind."

3. But further, if the word which God sent by Jesus Christ was first sent to the children of Israel, it was also a word which in its intrinsic character and tendency was inevitably universal. His ultimate address was not to a race but to a world. "God is no respecter of persons, but in every nation he that feareth Him and worketh righteousness is accepted with Him." He by whom "peace is preached to the children of Israel" is also "Lord of all."¹ And as His message is universal, so His is the moral and spiritual beauty, the divine unction² which attracts all men who have eyes left; and His the power³ which is capable of healing the whole⁴ diseased, unspiritualised material of man's nature, oppressed under the terrible dynasty of the Accuser.⁵

4. Finally, the Church wants to rest upon the great foundation of all this; to rise to the source of all the supernatural life of this marvellous Personality. Here we have the majestic theory of it—"for God was with Him."⁶ These words may, of course, be minimised or superficially understood. But like other great inspired utterances, they grow with the growth of the little ones of God. Taken by themselves, they need not signify much more than God's

¹ Acts x. 35, 36.

² ἔχρισεν αὐτὸν ὁ Θεὸς πνεύματι ἁγίῳ. Acts x. 38.

³ καὶ δυνάμει, Ibid.

⁴ ἰώμενος πάντας, Ibid.

⁵ τοὺς καταδυναστευομένους ὑπὸ τοῦ διαβόλου, Ibid.

⁶ Ibid.

guidance of a specially favoured servant; but they have in them the capacity of rising to the inguinding and indwelling Word—to “Emmanuel, which is, being interpreted, God with us.”¹

Now, let it be observed that the four Gospels, moulded round their Leading Ideas, exactly fill in these summary headings of the primitive Gospel, preached by St. Peter.

For Christ's life was many-sided. (1) It had its place as the historical consummation of the historical development of the purpose of God in Israel. Types and prophecy were fulfilled in Him. A great French poet has written of a dream of Boaz just before his marriage with Ruth. The account of the dream is, perhaps, partly prompted by some old cathedral window; but it embodies something of the spirit and purpose of the genealogy in St. Matthew.

“Then in his dream, to heaven, the blue and broad,
Right from his loins an oak-tree grew amain—
The race ran up it far, like a long chain—
Below it sang a King, above it died a God.”

St. Matthew's is the Gospel of consummated prophecy, specially addressed to the Hebrew race. (2) Again, the life of Christ, looked at from the side of its practical effects, had three salient characteristics. It was a life of unresting toil, of supernatural rapidity, of triumphant and enthusiastic benevolence. In appearance it might seem at times to be feeble and isolated, baffled by the hardness and unbelief of man.¹ In reality it was strong with the strength of God. It wrought, in some true sense, upon the masses by whom it seemed to be rejected. The very style of St. Mark bears the impress of these characteristics. Christ's toilsome life, its rapid movements, its joyful love in working and suffering for stricken and fallen humanity, are written as if by a hand which has had its fingers upon the Saviour's pulse, and has never since lost count of its beats. The opening invocation of In Memoriam expresses the purpose of the second Gospel in a single syllable—"Strong Son of God!" The first lines of St. Mark's record are: "The beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God."² It closes with the words: "they went forth, and preached everywhere; the Lord working with them, and confirming the word by the signs that followed."³ (3) Further, the ministerial work of οῦντος. St. Mark xvi. 20.

¹ St. Matthew i. 23.

¹ Contrast οὐκ ἐποίησεν ἐκεῖ δυνάμεις πολλὰς διὰ τὴν ἀπιστίαν αὐτῶν (St. Matthew xiii. 58), with οὐκ ἐδύνατο ἐκεῖ ποιῆσαι οὐδεμίαν δύναμιν, εἰ μὴ ὀλίγοις κ.τ.λ. καὶ ἐθαύμαζεν διὰ τὴν ἀπιστίαν αὐτῶν, St. Mark vi. 5, 6. The simple resources of the evangelist's language are strained to express this divinely human self-limitation of the Son of God—as wonder is the result of ignorance, of suddenly realized disproportion between conception and event, a self-limitation of knowledge as well as of power.

² St. Mark i. 1.

³ What a feeling of buoyant and helpful strength there is in ἐκήρυξαν πανταχοῦ, τοῦ Κυρίου συνεργοῦντος καὶ τὸν λόγον βεβαι-

Jesus was a work of healing which needed to be recorded in some detail, that its certainty as a fact might not be lost in vague surmise. But there was a higher healing still; that human life was a life of sweet sympathies and fruitful pardons, which opened out new possibilities to the penitent. It was a life lived by One who, in presence of the ignorant and wandering, maintained that exquisite equilibrium of feeling which was at once just and sweet, strong and gentle.¹ It had a special sympathy for the disinherited of the earth, for the weak and poor; a special sense of their present disadvantages, and yet of their possible compensations. And again, it was a life of beauty. Over it there was the movement of angels' wings, and the music of angels' songs. Its spontaneous utterances were parables of forgiveness, and words of tenderness; and the pages on which they are written are wetted with the sweetest tears which human eyes have ever shed. It began with the idyll of Bethlehem, and ended with the hands, gentle and omnipotent, lifted up to bless. A pencil of peculiar aptitudes was needed to render these aspects of the earthly life of Jesus. He who should worthily fill up this sketch must not only have deep love for its subject. He would appropriately be a physician.¹ He must be endowed with æsthetic sensibility. He must also be a psychologist. He must with delicate instinct perceive, and with sufficient range of language express, how the great Messenger of eternal love acted upon different leading types of human character; how he was received by woman, at that time despised and half forgotten, alike by Jew and Gentile. And in tracing out these details with almost every type and form of human character and feeling, a Gospel must be written fitted for the advancing footsteps of a faith which was addressing itself to the conquest of the world. Such an instrument was found in the third evangelist. (4) Finally, a life so various and many-sided; a character so mysteriously beautiful, yet with claims so lofty, so exacting, so assertive, so imperative, will be found to need a clue to its interpretation, a theory of its origin which shall sufficiently harmonize its apparently contradictory phenomena. This it is with which we are presented by St. John repeatedly in the course of the utterances preserved by him: most markedly in the Prologue of his Gospel, and in the great witness at its conclusion—"The Word was God, and the Word became flesh—my Lord and my God!"¹

¹ μετριοπαθεῖν δυνάμενος τοῖς ἀγνοοῦσι καὶ πλανωμένοις. (Hebrews v. 2, a lovely summary of St. Luke's Gospel traced, the writer ventures to surmise, by the evangelist's own hand. See Note A at the end of the volume.) Cf. the touching words about Jesus, attributed to St. Paul in an ancient apocryphal document, ὅς μόνος συνεπάθησεν πλανωμένῳ κόσμῳ,—“the only One who sympathised with a world that had lost its way,” Acta Pauli et Theclæ, 16. Acta Apost. Apoc. 47. Edit. Tischendorf.

¹ St. Luke might, and indeed did, write better Greek than the other authors of the books of the New Testament. Perhaps we have heard a little too much of this since S. Jerome spoke of his "sermo comptior, et secularem redolens eloquentiam." There has been too much tracing out of "classical colour, if not of imitation," in such expressions as θάμβος περιέσχευ αὐτόν (V. 9), and others; too much desire to make out the sacred writer, "acquainted with the principles of perfect composition, skilled in the use of them, and attentive to the effects which they must produce on the minds of his literate readers." (Bp. Jebb.) He did not belong to that republic of letters, the greater part of whose citizens, except a few children of genius, may be divided into the second-rate men of letters, who succeed—to their own satisfaction—and the critics "who are the writers that have failed." Rather, we feel more intensely how great and divine the Christ of the Gospel is, when the image, which from a mere literary point of view is imperfect, grows so radiant to every soul that contemplates it.

Thus, in St. Matthew we have Christ's earthly existence as a life freely moulding itself in a pre-designated form; in St. Mark as a strong life; in St. Luke as a tender life; in St. John as literally a Divine life, the life of God humanified, lived under human conditions and to some extent limitations. In the first, we see Jesus as the Messiah; in the second, as the Son of God; in the third, as the Son of Man; in the fourth, as the God-Man. With St. Matthew, the chief factor is the conception of prophecy; with St. Mark, the conception of power; with St. Luke, the conception of beauty; with St. John, the conception of Divinity. In the first, the predominant elements are fulfilment and sacrifice; in the second, action and conquest; in the third, forgiveness and universal grace; in the fourth, idealism and dogma. St. Matthew will ever appeal most powerfully to the Old Testament scholar; St. Mark to the ecclesiastical organizer, to him who is attracted to the outward things of Christ; while St. Luke has a voice of charm for the imaginative and tender, and St. John supplies the chosen food of the mystic and of the sacramental instinct. If we look round upon Christendom, we shall find more of one evangelist than of another in each of its tendencies and creations. St. Matthew must always be our chief guide through the Hebrew porch of the Church. St. Mark's spirit is with those who have fitted outward symbols to the Church's organic life, as expressive of inward ideas. St. Luke has the largest part in the galleries of sacred art, in the utterances of sacred poets, in the austere joy of canticles and liturgies, with missionaries, with workers in hospitals, with those who are devoted to the service of poverty and the help of penitents. St. John has the largest share in the vast volumes of dogmatic theology. From him principally faith learns the mystery of the New Birth of water and of the Spirit; the sweet and awful secret of the sacramental Presence.¹

¹ St. John i. 2-14; xx. 28.

¹ It is to be observed that the first epistle of St. John contains a short but comprehensive synopsis of the contents of the Gospel at the beginning (1 John i. 1), and a synoptical analysis of one of its Leading Ideas (that of witness) at the close (1 John v. 6, 10). The writer ventures to believe that he has elsewhere established this

III

The memorable passage of Ezekiel's prophecy, prefixed to this discussion, seems to be not without reference to the characteristics and Leading Ideas of the four constituents of the fourfold gospel. All that most truly lives is here by representation. The ox is the emblem of toil and of sacrifice; of patient, suffering, bleeding life. The lion is strong, royal, victorious. The eagle soars upward in spires, rising and falling with no apparent effort; gliding over the highest mountains and lost in the azure distances, apparently in the heaven itself. And above these three highest specimens of forms of animal life man comes, who blends in one, and carries into a higher sphere all those endowments which they possess in some measure in fact, perfectly in the conception of gifted souls.¹ Man alone is capable of sacrifice in its one true form—self-sacrifice; man alone is capable of the only conquests that are noble, of the only ideas which elevate to heaven. The great conceptions of three of the cherubic symbols—the ox, the lion, the eagle—suffering, action, thought, assertion of a Leading Idea in the Fourth Gospel by the evangelist himself. The Epistles of St. John: Twenty-one Discourses, pp. 23, 30-36, 38.

¹ See especially Lange's beautiful discussion, Book I. Part vii. Sect. ii. Life of Christ (Vol. i., 186-227, E.T.).

find their perfection in the truly human life and nature which is symbolised by the Man.¹

It may be asked how we connect this with the Gospels, and the cherubic symbols with the Evangelists?

God appears to the prophet in human form. The canopy on which His Throne is fixed is lowered to the earth. The cherubim are seen, the sure sign of God's dwelling with His people. They are no visionary symbols. They are real, living with an intense reality. They plant their feet upon the ground. The wonderful wheel beside each cherub does not move through the air, but upon the earth. For God comes down and dwells visibly among men. His Presence is not confined to one place or one temple. He goes forth among the nations, which are represented by the powerful form of the cherubim and the wheels—four being the prophetic number of catholicity. God's glory going forth from Israel to the nations on His car of progress; the throne, and above the throne, "the likeness as the appearance of a man above upon it,"¹ i. e. not man deified, but God humanified in the Incarnation; to the Christian this is the religion and teaching of Jesus Christ. And the knowledge and worship of Jesus Christ has gone abroad by the Gospels,² which thus possess certain of the characteristics symbolised by the cherubim as manifested to the prophet.

¹ The old rabbinical saying was —“Quatuor sunt qui principatum in hoc mundo tenent; inter creaturas homo, inter aves aquila, inter pecora bos, inter bestias leo.” Schemoth Rabba. SCHÖTTGEN. Hore Hebr. 1168.—“Quaternis faciebus eximie series atque facultates significantur, cherubis a Deo ad munus suum sustinendum imperitæ.” (Ed. C. AUGUST. RIEHM. De Natura et Notione Symbolica Cherub. pp. 21 sqq.) It is, however, to be borne in mind that representations of abstract ideas as living things really lie outside the region of Biblical symbolism. The cherubim are angels of an exalted order (Ezek. xxviii. 14-16). The gates of Eden were not kept by ideal conceptions (Gen. iii. 24). But this does not affect the fact that the description of the living realities is best conveyed to us by certain symbolical expressions. See Commentary on Eschiel, Keil, i. 17-43.

This interpretation is often stigmatized as a childish play of fancy. Certain it is, however, that from the beginning it has been a favourite of Christian thought. When the interpretation was revived at Oxford some forty-five years ago, it was treated in many quarters as a mere mystic dream. Since that time, however, the passage has been profoundly studied; and modern sacred science among believing critics in Germany, as elsewhere, tends to accept this view as undeniably well-founded. No doubt among early Christian writers, there were childlike, or childish, guesses at the particulars of the symbols. The prevalent interpretation of Biblical scholars tends to the following distribution:—the ox is the symbol of sacrifice, and stamps the Gospel of St. Matthew; the lion represents strength and victory, and suits the Gospel of St. Mark; the Man refers to the human sympathy and the salvation offered to universal humanity, and, therefore, accords with St. Luke. Heavenly aspirations and thoughts elevated by the dogma of dogmas to the Divinity of Jesus Christ, claim for themselves the symbol of the eagle, and belong to St. John.

¹ Ezekiel i. 26.

² "Has Domini sacras quadrigas, quibus per orbem vectus subigit populos leni suo jugo et sarcina levi." ST. AUGUST. Lib. de Consens. Evang. 1-7.

If there are any readers to whom this interpretation appears to dwell in a region of which they are upon principle suspicious, they will at least allow that one consideration of importance follows from it. The early, and apparently almost universal acceptance of this application—if we will not allow the term interpretation—of prophecy, proves at least that the line of thought upon which it was based commended itself to ancient Christianity. The conception of Leading Ideas, answering to mental characteristics, of the four Evangelists, was one with which they felt at home; and which, if not created by the symbols of Ezekiel, at least naturally expressed itself by them. If the symbols did not create the conception, the conception availed itself of the symbols.

IV

In the progress of these discussions it will be our duty to guard this conception of Leading Ideas in the Gospels from an extravagant amount of application, as well as from unjust and malignant inferences. We may close this argument with an analogy and with a practical remark.

(a) In the biographies of remarkable men, who touch the circumference of human life at more points than one, we may find some analogies to different Gospels, written from different Leading Ideas.

Of Socrates (who, in this like our Lord, left no writings behind him) we have representations in the Memorabilia of Xenophon, and in the Dialogues of Plato. Of these, as has often been remarked, the first corresponds in its way to the synoptic; the second to the loftier and more ideal conception of St. John. But every one feels that Plato is not falsified by Xenophon, nor Xenophon by Plato—much less is the august figure of Socrates relegated to the land of shadows by the different representations of the two reporters. We combine the two images, and get a generalized photograph, better and truer than either separately.

Archbishop Laud, as a statesman and great ecclesiastical politician, found a congenial biographer in Heylin; but the deeper spiritual life, the almost awful intensity of penitential self-abasement so pathetically manifested in the Archbishop's diary and in his dying speech, has found no biographer. Heylin has never touched that with one of his fingers—his Leading Idea was that of the statesman-primate, and all which lay outside was totally omitted by him. The life of Laud lay in two spheres, and Heylin had only set foot in one of the two. If any man thinks it right to be just even to Laud, he will supplement the Leading Idea of Heylin by what was evidently the Leading Idea of Laud himself, and, no doubt, of the few whom Laud admitted into the sanctuary of his soul.¹

(b) The practical remark which we offer is this :

A life constructed according to Leading Ideas must necessarily assume the character of an "informal memoir"; and this, as has been most truly remarked, best preserves and continues the impression of a great personality. As a matter of fact, we have not one perfect and unbroken record of the earthly life of Jesus; but four different "projections," four different "photographs," which each individual soul has to reproduce for itself.² The image which we receive from them is vivified and made luminous for us by another influence. The same spirit which lay behind and below the one great production of each Gospel lies behind and below each partial and individual reproduction of it. "He shall glorify Me, for He shall receive of Mine, and shall show it unto you."¹

¹ "The homo interior was not in Heylin's line."—MOZLEY, Essay, I, 109.

² See the excellent passage in Mr. Latham's Pastor Pastorum, pp. 16-18.

One thing is certain. It is not by their style that the four Gospels do their work; not even St. Luke's Gospel, with its undeniable superiority in this respect. It has been repeatedly said of late that the Gospels (in common with other parts of Scripture) enjoy what may be called an unfair advantage in the simple majesty and noble rhythm of our English authorised version. But it cannot be supposed that all other languages have been in a spontaneous conspiracy to elevate the sacred Books beyond their proper level in the opinion of civilised humanity. Yet, as far as one can judge, no fainter impression of the work and character of Jesus Christ is made upon the people of other lands by their inferior versions. The majesty and beauty of the Man is not a sum-total proportioned to the sum-total of the majesty and beauty of the style in which His earthly life is described. The spiritual nobility of the first is absolutely incommensurable with the intellectual nobility of the second. It is the image of Jesus which tinges, which radiates through, the wrappings of style, as the sunset through a swathe of clouds. Infinite love and wisdom struggle through words which not seldom are poor and broken enough. It is not human genius masquerading, playing at Divinity in divinely beautiful language. It is Divinity condescending to veil itself partially in ordinary speech for its own high ends. Our belief in the truth of the narratives is more entire when they are told with such sacred negligence of rhetorical and literary embellishment. In the Gospels Christ comes to us, and we may go to Him, almost as in His sacrament. In the great words of the old martyr, whose broken Greek has sometimes such singular power—"we fly for refuge to the Gospel, as to the flesh of Jesus."¹

¹ St. John xvi. 14.

To the Leading Ideas of the four Gospels we owe the shape which they have assumed ; and to the four Gospels—partly in spite of, partly on account of, their style—we owe our knowledge of Jesus Christ.

¹ προσφυγὼν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ ὡς σαρκὶ Ἰησοῦ. IGNAT. Epist. ad Philadelph. v.

II

THE LEADING IDEAS OF ST. MATTHEW'S GOSPEL

“The book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the Son of David, the Son of Abraham.”—ST. MATTHEW i. 1.

WHEN the martyr Ignatius was making his progress to Rome, he wrote to the Philadelphians in that strange Greek which, if at times it is broken and almost extravagant, is often pregnant with thought, and almost (one is tempted to think) just on the line of transition between inspiration and ordinary sanctity. “I have heard some,” he writes, “saying, ‘unless I find this in the archives I do not believe it in the Gospel;’ and when I said to them, ‘yes, but it stands written,’ they replied, ‘Ah! that is just the question.’ But for me this is all superfluous. Jesus Christ is the archives—the sacro-sanct inviolable archives is His cross, and His death, and His resurrection, and the faith which is through Him.”¹ This faith must have been deep in the writer of the first Gospel, when Christianity presented itself for acceptance to the Jews, or to Christians of Hebraic origin who were to be confirmed in the Church’s creed.

I

The Gospel of St. Matthew is pervaded by two Leading Ideas, and follows two fundamental conceptions.

1. It is the Gospel of the discourses. St. Matthew indeed is, in a good sense, “bodily” as opposed to “spiritual.”² He does not record such discourses as that concerning the bread of life, nor such words as those which were breathed forth among the inner circle in the guest-chamber. Still, as Renan says, a “glory which is at once gentle and terrible, a divine power underlies the words of Jesus in St. Matthew.” Many chapters are filled with the record of His teaching—the Sermon on the Mount; the instruction to the Apostles upon their first mission ; the cluster of the parables of the Kingdom ; the eightfold woe in the twenty-third chapter ; the eschatological predictions and parables in the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth chapters.¹

¹ μηδὲν κατ’ ἐριθείαν πράσσετε ἀλλὰ κατὰ χριστομαθίαν. ἐπεὶ ἤκουσά τινων λεγόντων ὅτι Ἐὰν μὴ ἐν τοῖς ἀρχαίοις εὕρω ἐν τῇ εὐαγγελίῳ οὐ πιστεύω, καὶ λέγοντός μου αὐτοῖς ὅτι Γέγραπται ἀπεκρίθησάν μοι ὅτι Πρόκειται· ἐμοὶ δὲ ἀρχεῖά ἐστιν Ἰησοῦς Χριστός, τὰ ἄθικτα ἀρχεῖα ὁ σταυρὸς αὐτοῦ καὶ ὁ θάνατος καὶ ἡ ἀνάστασις αὐτοῦ καὶ ἡ πίστις ἡ δι’ αὐτῶν. IGNAT. Epist. ad Philadelph. viii. (Apostolic Fathers, Part ii. Vol. ii. pp. 271–273. Bishop Lightfoot.)

² σωματικός—πνευματικός.

A brief answer may suffice to certain questions which have been asked, apparently for the purpose of disturbing simple Christians in the quiet enjoyment of their Master's words. How do you know that it is, indeed, the very echo of His voice which comes to you across the gulf of time ? Was there a reporter in the apostolic company who could write shorthand and take sufficient notes ? Are not these discourses like the speeches in Thucydides or Livy ? As Christians, we are satisfied with that sentence—"the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, shall teach you all things"—that is, all things not of the first creation, which is the object of science, but of the second, which is the object of revelation :—"and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you."² There is no tablet like a loving memory, no remembrancer like God the Holy Ghost.

2. We pass on to the second great Leading Idea of St. Matthew's Gospel.

We need not inquire whether the ancient tradition, that this Gospel was originally written in ¹ St. Matthew v.-viii. ; x. 5-42 ; xiii. 3-52 ; xxiii. 13, sqq. ; xxiv., xxv.

² St. John xiv. 26.

Hebrew (affirmed by Papias, Irenæus, Clement of Alexandria, Tertullian and others, but since the time of Erasmus warmly contested), is true or false. But at all events, with its contents before us, we need not hesitate to say that it bears something the same relation to the other Gospels which the Epistle to the Hebrews bears to the other Epistles. It is the Gospel of types in history, in law, in worship, accomplishing themselves, unrecognized by those to whom they specially pertained. It is the Gospel of prophecy, accumulating and interweaving its marvellous coincidences (sometimes in dark sayings like those of the thirty pieces of silver, and of the going before the disciples into Galilee¹) round the Birth and Life, the Death and Resurrection, of Jesus. It is the Gospel of the Christ, crowning the aspirations of saints and seers, but not the carnal expectations of the Jews. It is the Gospel of true Judaism, as opposed to the corrupt Judaism of Priests and Scribes, of Pharisees and Sadducees.

This is written on its forefront. "The book of the generation,"² not "the history of the childhood," but the "liber de originibus Jesu"—Jesus the Messiah; the Child of Abraham, in Whom all families are to be blessed; the Heir of David's throne, yet rejected by the Jews.

¹ St. Matthew xxvii. 9; Zechariah xi. 12, 13; St. Matthew xxvi. 31, 32; Zechariah xiii. 7. ² βίβλος γενέσεως. St. Matthew i. 1.

(a) In the few opening chapters prophecy marks Him for its own. "That it might be fulfilled" is the often recurring formula. He is the Virgin's Son promised to Israel. His Name Jesus, God the Saviour, is practically the equivalent of Emmanuel.¹ From the mines and forests of the dim mysterious East gold and incense are brought to the Babe born in Bethlehem. Like the collective Israel, so the personal Israel, God's servant, is called out of Egypt, to accomplish the redemption which the historical Israel had failed to effect.² Round the awful cradle of the new-born King the sobs of Rachel rise, in a grief whose anguish echoes Jeremiah's strain of sorrow. He grows up in Nazareth, that the prediction of all the prophets³ might be fulfilled, who said—"He shall be an enigma, despised of men, yet adored by those who despise Him; for he who calls Jesus Nazarene shall against his will call Him—'my Saviour, my Protector.'"⁴ The voice of the forerunner, announced

¹ "Thou shalt call His name Jesus. Now all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet saying, they shall call His name Emmanuel—God with us." St. Matthew i. 21-23. The Emmanuel idea and dogma is at the root of the name Jesus rightly understood. See Pearson On the Creed, Art. ii.

² St. Matthew ii. 15; Hosea xi. 1.

³ διὰ τῶν προφητῶν. St. Matthew ii. 23.

⁴ The most ancient interpretation of this passage is that which St. Jerome heard from some learned Jews, who became Christians. It refers it to that passage in the 11th of Isaiah, where we read of a branch growing out of the roots of Jesse. But the Hebrew word is by Isaiah and Malachi, prepares His way. He dwells in Capernaum, that the light seen by Isaiah—a richer dawn than ever flushed the Syrian sky—may shine down upon the people that sit in darkness and the shadow of death.¹ Yet all the sign which Israel gives is this,—that when the Wise Men come from the East to Jerusalem they are near being murdered by the false king of the Jews. And the Chief Priests and Scribes of the people never visit the place to which, with prophecy in their hands, they guided others.

נָצַר. St. Matthew's meaning in that case would be—he who contemptuously gives to the Son of David the name of Nazarene accomplishes Prophecy, for this Nazarene is the true nōts'ēr, the Branch of God, growing out of the root of Jesse.

“In Hebrew the name Nazarene is pronounced notsriy. The Jews at this day call Jesus by this name in contempt. But the same word notsrīy signifies also ‘my Saviour,’ ‘my Protector.’ This expression is not, indeed, found in any isolated Messianic passage in the Old Testament, but all the Prophets, without exception, represent Him as the Saviour and Protector of Israel. St. Matthew means to say—It is a stumbling-block to you that the Son of David has been brought up in this poor Nazareth. In your wish to insult Him by this reproach, you do but accomplish prophecy. When you call Him nōtsrīy you announce His truth: you fulfil that which the prophets foretold: you declare that He is your saviour and protector. This is one reason why He was to come from Nazareth, that those who insult Him under the name of nōtsrīy should be obliged to glorify Him by saying ‘my redeemer and protector,’ which is, in point of fact, conformable to the word of the Prophets.”—RIGGENBACH. Leben Jesu, pp. 203, 204. [נָצַר to behold or look has the secondary signification of watching—sometimes in a hostile sense (as some understand נָצַר הָאָדָם, Job vii. 20), but more frequently as watching over to preserve.]

¹ St. Matthew iv. 12 sqq.; Isaiah ix. 1, 2.

In the Sermon on the Mount, One speaks to us Who is a new and a greater Moses—Who has come by the great strokes of His life and death not to destroy, but to fill up¹ the faint sketch of the Law—to give a new law to men endowed with a new spirit.

Again, in the eighth and ninth chapters we have that ascending series of miracles, beginning with the victory over disease close at hand or far off, passing on through the calmed waters and the dispossessed demoniacs, until it finds its culminating point in forgiven sin and vanquished death. What is the first special miracle recorded by St. Matthew?—The healing of the leper.² Why does it stand first? Spiritually, no doubt, it follows the Sermon on the Mount, to tell how the eternal leprosy that cleaves to our race can alone be healed. Not merely by words. Not by systems of morality whether they call themselves dependent, independent, or of the will of God. Not by one speaking royally, like a distant king from a cloud of purple and gold; nor roughly, like the policeman who bids misery clear the way; nor patronisingly, like the hard kind of good people, who have never been tempted in some directions themselves, and drop down loving texts into the sinner's sore with such acidulated accents of severe virtue that the wound smarts and throbs; nor sentimentally, like popular preachers and the "feeble folk" who write stories for little children which sometimes harden the hearts they are intended to touch. The leprosy can only be healed by one coming down from the mountain and entering into fellowship with the leper; by putting out the hand, and touching the poor defiled thing, and then, in Christ's spirit, saying to it, "be thou clean." But it is also significant that the very miracle stands in the front of St. Matthew's Gospel, which would above all others impress a reader who knew the ritual law with the conviction that the healer of leprosy was the Christ, the Son of Abraham and David.

¹ πληρῶσαι, v. 17. Καὶ ἄλλως δὲ ἐπλήρωσε τὸν νόμον, τοῦτεστιν ἀνεπλήρωσεν· ὅσα γὰρ ἐκεῖνος ἐσκιαγράφησε, ταῦτα οὗτος τελείως ἐζωγράφησεν· ἐκεῖνος τὸ μὴ φονήσῃς, οὗτος τὸ μηδὲ θυμωθῆς εἰκῇ. ὥσπερ καὶ ὁ ζωγράφος οὐ καταλύει τὴν σκιαγραφίαν ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον ἀναπληροῖ.—THEOPHYL. in Matt. v. Tom. i. 25. See a long catena of passages from the Fathers to the same effect in Hammond's interesting note. Practical Catechism, Lib. ii. Sect. 3, pp. 110-114.

² St. Matthew viii. 2-5.

Time goes on with its great deeds and gentle words. The satanic hatred of the Pharisees conspires for His destruction:—"the Pharisees went out and held a council against Him how they might destroy Him."¹ Then follows the victory of divine gentleness. They sought to destroy: He withdrew Himself and healed.² If His loving eye sees one sound and living fibre in the reed,

¹ St. Matthew xii. 14.

² Ibid. 15.

He will fill the earth with His spring, and send through the reed the sap of His grace, and save it by that fibre. If He perceives one spark in the smoking wick, He will cover it with the hollow of His hand, and breathe upon it, and waken it into a light for the feast or for the altar.¹ But the Pharisees blaspheme. "This fellow doth not cast out devils but by Beelzebub, the prince of the devils."² And judgment is pronounced,—“so it shall be also unto this wicked generation.”³

Miracle upon miracle is wrought; yet Judaism calls for another sign, for “a sign from heaven.”⁴ There is one brief Hosanna, one fitful revival. Alas! the fig-tree (God’s own type of Israel in Hosea,⁵) is its image. The deceptive tree deluded the hungry by the wayside. Disciples might seek for spiritual good from a system rich in leaves, but without fruits; and so be prepared for a judgment that should blast and wither the theocratic people from the very root. The words immediately following are not hyperbole. They are prophecy. “This mountain” is the temple-hill, the representative of Judaism; and the “sea” into which it is to be cast and lost is the sea of nations.⁶ In the twenty-second and twenty-third chapters the great Questioner baffles the Sadducees and Scribes,

¹ St. Matthew xii. 20; cf. Isaiah xlii. 3. ² St. Matthew xii. 24.

³ Ibid. 45.

⁴ St. Matthew xvi. 1; cf. xii. 38.

⁵ Hosea ix. 10.

⁶ St. Matthew xxi. 21.

and reduces the Pharisees to silence; and then pours out burning words, scathing their hypocrisy and proselytism and Jesuitical distinctions. "Ye are like unto whited sepulchres, which indeed appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones, and of all uncleanness." The worm of death gnaws at the foundation of Judaism. It breeds stench and pestilence. And then the true Israel went out and departed from the temple, His retreating footsteps forming the prelude to the voice which was heard afterwards,—“let us go hence,”—and God's Presence went with Him.¹

The same view pervades the closing chapters.

The drama deepens to its end. He has appeared first as law-giver; secondly, as wonder-worker; thirdly, as teacher. He must be more than these.—More than law-giver. Law wakens the moral sense to obligations, towering one beyond the other into an infinite distance. Law tells the listening ear of the cruel dissonance between the discord of that which a man is, and the perfect music of that which he ought to be. Man needs something by which he may be lifted to the distant summit ; by which the sense of discord may be mitigated. As the Redeemer must be more than law-giver, so He must be more than wonder-worker. The miracle comes to tell us that what we call nature is not so natural after all ; that man is from time to time reached by a higher law, which touches him with its light but seldom in the centuries ; that He who works it has knowledge of a great chapter, whereof that which we call law is but a poor sub-section. Man wants something more than to know even God's wisdom and power. The Saviour of a being like man must, again, be more than merely a teacher. The moral precept without requires a moral power within. The parable shows us nature with lights of God's Kingdom upon it, falling through a door which we cannot enter. Therefore, He must be more. He must be the High Priest, entering into the lowest depths ; kneeling in Gethsemane, with a burden laid upon Him ; hanging upon the cross, priest and victim, with the pierced hands and feet, and the wounded side, and the awful circlet of the crown of thorns, and the pale and dying lips. He must then, to make this effectual, be the King reigning in glory, and sending out heralds to gather in His people, not from one race alone, but from all lands, into a Catholic Church.

¹ The close of St. Matthew xxiii. and beginning of xxiv. 1, lose their terrible significance by being sharply cut in two: ἀφίεται ὑμῖν ὁ οἶκος ὑμῶν ἔρημος. λέγω γὰρ ὑμῖν, οὐ μὴ με ἴδητε ἀπ' ἄρτι ἕως ἂν εἴπητε κ.τ.λ.—καὶ ἐξελθὼν ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἐπορεύετο ἀπὸ τοῦ ἱεροῦ. St. Matthew xxiii. 38, 39; xxiv. 1. There are three divine momenta here. (1) God's house become, not His, but theirs (ὑμῖν, ὑμῶν). (2) Its utter desolation and deconsecration with all its consequences to them (ἀφίεται ὑμῖν ἔρημος). (3) The sentence actually taking effect by the departure of Jesus, and His withdrawal from the whole temple precinct (ἐξελθὼν ἐπορεύετο ἀπὸ τοῦ ἱεροῦ).

We find the same conception moulding the evangelist's materials at the close as at the beginning—accomplished prophecy and Jewish blindness. "The High Priest rent his clothes."¹ "The rent garment," says Bishop Taylor, "signifying that the priesthood should be rent away from him and from his nation. His personated and theatric horror became the type of his punishment." The dream of Pilate's wife and the washing of Pilate's hands are a silent but terrible reproach to the Jewish rulers.²

This is brought out more clearly by the shapes which stand in contrast with the Chief Priests, and Scribes, and Elders, as He hangs upon the cross. The Roman centurion might have seen men dying on the battle-field, but never a death like that, when Jesus "cried again with a loud voice and yielded up the ghost."³ The women look on with pity, "beholding afar off." The rich man begged the body of Jesus. But the chiefs of fallen Judaism conspire with the heathen. "They came together unto Pilate."⁴ More than that—"they gave large money unto the soldiers, saying, say ye His disciples came by night and stole Him away whilst we slept."⁵ And then,

¹ St. Matthew xxvi. 65.

² Ibid. xxvii. 19, 24. On dreams in St. Matthew's Gospel, see Note 2 at the end of this discussion.

³ St. Matthew xxvii. 50.

⁴ Ibid. 62.

⁵ Ibid. xxviii. 12, 13.

—remembering doubtless how well they had succeeded with an Apostle,—in the spirit of the English minister who said “every man has his price” (and truly enough of most men whom he was likely to know), “if this comes to the governor’s ears, we will persuade him and secure you.”¹

Is there not prophecy there to those who will look below the surface? Every nation has a lower, as well as a loftier side. Ever since that fatal bribe was paid; in spite of endowments, often splendid, sometimes beautiful, in spite of magnificent ransoms to humanity paid out of the gold which Judaism has the genius for amassing; baseness about money has too often thinned the noble blood of those whose spiritual fathers were “homines desideriorum.” The sad deed of fallen Judaism round the holy sepulchre has been sadly avenged by the bar sinister of meanness drawn across one of the proudest escutcheons in the history of mankind.

But enough of them. Money is not almighty. Stones cannot keep down the Holy One, nor hierarchs suppress the living and the true. The Passion Week is ended. The Easter Sunday has come and gone. The Son of Abraham and David enters into His Kingdom and passes into Galilee.² The spell of the mountains seems to have been on

¹ St. Matthew xxviii. 14.

² Ibid. xxviii. 16.

St. Matthew, and he loved to contemplate the Son of God in those solemn sanctuaries. We remember the mountain of the Temptation,¹ of the beatitudes, of the prayer during the storm, of the Transfiguration, and finally of the meeting in Galilee after the Resurrection.²

"Then the eleven disciples went away into Galilee, into a mountain, where Jesus had appointed them." Judaism has done its worst to the bitter end. High Priests and Scribes, the heads of the ecclesiastical power and men of the dominant theological schools; Pharisees and Sadducees, the precursors of religious parties that have lost their life, and become carrion things round which the eagles are gathering; the shadows that project themselves into the future, and become to us like familiar shapes—the sceptic, the Jesuit, the predestinarian, the Pharisee who is not a Protestant, and the Pharisee who is; they have killed the Holy One of God. They have wrangled and cheated, they have bribed and lied over the empty grave; but the Risen Lord is on the hills of Galilee. He is freer than the mountain air. "All power is given unto Him in heaven and earth."¹ He sends His heralds, unconfined by the narrow limits of one land, to disciple all nations by baptizing them, and promises to be with them all days, the darkest not less than the brightest, to the end of the world.²

¹ It should be noted that the true reading of St. Luke iv. 5 has only ἀναγαγὼν αὐτόν ("he led Him up," R.V.), while St. Matthew to παραλαμβάνει αὐτόν adds εἰς ὄρος ὑψηλὸν λίαν. (St. Matthew iv. 8.)

² St. Matthew iv. 8; v. 1; xiv. 23; xv. 29; xvii. 1; xxviii. 16. Cf. xviii. 12; xxi. 21; xxiv. 16, as illustrating the attraction of the mountains to the humanity of our Lord.

Thus does St. Matthew fill up this great conception of prophecy accomplished in the Son of Abraham and David: of Him Who is the true Israel, in Whose work and Person true Judaism is concentrated, over against the false Judaism of a fallen priesthood and an apostate people.

II. We may now apply this view of St. Matthew's Gospel, first to the question of the origin of the Gospels, secondly in a practical way.

It may be looked upon as an ascertained result of criticism, that the Gospels were all written within the first century; none earlier than about A.D. 60, none later than between A.D. 80 and 90. This historical fact will seem strange to certain modern notions. Consider for a moment how the matter really stands. Let us put ourselves in imagination back to Pentecost. In those her bridal days, the young Church was filled, not with new wine, but with a holy and heavenly enthusiasm. The light of the everlasting morning had not yet ceased to flood her spires and battlements. Her tabernacle was yet on the holy hills, and the cry rose to her lips—"Lord! it is good for us to be here." With loins girded and lamps burning, she waited for her Lord's coming, and strained her eyes towards the eternal dawn. She was the "pilgrim of eternity"; and the song which she rolled out strong and grand against the winter sky was—"arise we and depart: for this is not our rest." It may be that she had not special days of commemoration, Christmas or Good-Friday, Easter or Ascension. But she lived upon her Lord's Birth and Death, upon His Resurrection and Ascension. She needed no book of His Logia, of His discourses or of His works. There were those with her who had seen Him on the mountain of Transfiguration; who had heard Him say, "peace be unto you," on the great Easter Sunday; and had felt joy deepening within them, as they looked upon the atoning wounds.

¹ St. Matthew xxviii. 18, 20.

² Ibid.

At first, then, there was not, and there needed not to be, any official memorial of the Lord. The sermons of the Apostles were, in many cases, it would appear, summaries of our Lord's life.¹ In portions of the apostolic Epistles, particular incidents are mentioned or assumed, though not so frequently as in Christian writings of a later date. The institution of the Eucharist is recorded in the First Epistle to the Corinthians, and the ¹ Acts ii. 22-37; v. 29-33; x. 34-44; xiii. 23-40.

Transfiguration in the Second Epistle of St. Peter.¹ St. Paul speaks of the Birth and Circumcision of Jesus, and of His life of poverty.² The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews, while asserting the continuance of miracles in the Christian society of his day,³ implies that he recognises the fuller flood of miraculous efficacy in our Lord's ministry by adopting three words recognised for it in the Evangelists.⁴ Other incidents of less primary importance are also referred to in a way which implies an acquaintance with them. The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews assumes it as "evident," known to all,⁵ that "our Lord has arisen out of Judah." When the same writer says, "Jesus suffered without the gate, let us go forth, therefore, unto Him without the camp bearing His reproach,"⁶ we may have a reminiscence of the Saviour led out to be crucified, and of the Cyrenian bearing His cross. The "Abba, Father" of Romans and Galatians is an echo from Gethsemane; "the strong crying and tears" of Jesus in Hebrews ¹ 1 Corinthians xi. 23; 2 St. Peter i. 16, 19.

² Galatians iv. 4-6; 2 Corinthians viii. 9.

³ συνεπιμαρτυροῦντος. Hebrews ii. 4: "This witness is present and not past" (BISHOP WESTCOTT in loc.).

⁴ σημεῖα καὶ τέρατα combined in St. Matthew xxiv. 24; St. Mark xiii. 22; St. John iv. 43; δυνάμεις, St. Matthew xi. 20; St. Mark vi. 14.

⁵ πρόδηλον. Hebrews vii. 14.

⁶ Hebrews xiii. 13; cf. St. Matthew xxvii. 32; St. Mark xv. 21; St. Luke xxiii. 26.

calls up the whole scene.¹ When St. Paul desires that women "may attend upon the Lord without distraction,"² had he not before the eye of his mind the tender picture of the two sisters, whereof one sat at Jesus's feet, while the other was "cumbered"³ about much serving? In the Epistle to the Galatians the baptismal "robing with Christ" is borrowed from the parable of the Prodigal; it is a hint of—"bring forth the best robe, and put it on him."⁴ In the Epistle to Timothy, the Apostle urges the payment of certain presbyters on the authority of Christ's saying—"the labourer is worthy of his hire,"—and that in a way which presupposes his knowledge of the whole discourse addressed to the Seventy.⁵ When St. John utters that admonition—"He that saith he abideth in Him ought also so to walk as He made His one great life-walk"⁶—whether or not we suppose that his Epistle was a circular letter accompanying the Gospel, he must have had a distinct image before his own soul, which he took it for granted was no less present to theirs. As time went on, the words

¹ Romans viii. 15; Galatians iv. 6; Hebrews v. 7. The twelfth chapter of the Revelation manifestly borrows its colouring from the Birth of Jesus, and Herod's "seeking the young Child's life." Apoc. xii. 1-4, 5.

² ἀπερισπάστως. 1 Corinthians vii. 35.

³ περιεσπᾶτο. St. Luke x. 40.

⁴ Χριστὸν ἐνεδύσασθε. Galatians iii. 27, cf. St. Luke xv. 22.

⁵ 1 Timothy v. 18; cf. St. Luke x. 7.

⁶ καθὼς ὁ κείνος περιεπάτησε. 1 St. John ii. 6.

of Jesus were brought to the Church's mind according to His promise. The successive needs of the Church touched and quickened the springs of memory, and events brought out the latent treasures which she possessed. "In verbis Christi semina erant totius cursus Evangelii." Thus, when the Holy Ghost began to fall on certain, St. Peter exclaims—"then remembered I the word of the Lord, how that he said, John indeed baptized with water, but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost."¹ The suddenness of the Lord's Second Coming is illustrated in the First Epistle to the Thessalonians, by an image of the most vivid familiarity. "Concerning the times and the seasons ye have no need that aught be written unto you." Why no need? Because they knew already, from a higher source, out of the treasures of a greater teaching, accurately, spontaneously, without need of prophecy, that the "day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night." They knew it from the recorded discourses of Jesus.² When St. Paul would enforce the important practical principle that the Church is not the diaphanous creature which extreme voluntarism would make her, he remembers Christ's words—"the labourer is worthy of his hire.”¹ If he would remove morbid scruples from the sensitive conscience of the man who went to the entertainment of one who was external to the Church, he reminds the Corinthians how Jesus had spoken to the Seventy upon their mission—“eat such things as are set before you.”² When the same Apostle deals with the question of the inviolability of the marriage bond, he falls back upon the remembered command of the Lord—“I command, yet not I, but the Lord: let not the wife depart from her husband”—the substance of His answer to the question of the Pharisees—“is it lawful for a man to put away his wife?”³ It seems to be as certain as anything of the kind can be that an unwritten traditional life of Jesus graven upon the living heart of the Church, preceded the written life. In this, startling as it seems at first hearing to some, there is no derogation from the honour of the written word. No ark of the new Covenant overlaid round about with gold kept in its side the book of the new law. There was not, as in Bacon’s fine romance of Atlantis, the pillar and cross of light, breaking up and casting itself into a firmament of many stars, and the branch of palm covering the ark of cedar which floated upon the calm mysterious sea, with the volume of the Gospels shrouded in its depths. Yet the Holy Spirit guided the memories, and freely used the intelligences of Apostles and their disciples, that His Church might know the certainty of those things wherein she had been instructed; and that across the gulf of ages, and the mists of history, down to the end of time, the eyes of Christians might see the authentic lineaments of the King in His beauty.

¹ Acts xi. 16; cf. i. 5.

² αὐτοὶ γὰρ ἀκριβῶς οἶδατε ὅτι ἡμέρα κ. ὡς κλέπτῃς ἐν νυκτὶ οὕτως ἔρχεται. 1 Thessalonians v. 2. Cf. St. Matthew xxiv. 43; St. Luke xii. 39; 2 St. Peter iii. 10. It is interesting to find the synoptical word in the Apocalypse iii. 3, xvi. 15.

¹ 1 Timothy v. 18; cf. St. Luke x. 7.

² 1 Corinthians x. 27; cf. St. Luke x. 8.

³ 1 Corinthians vii. 10; cf. St. Matthew xix. 3, 9; cf. also the παραθήσομαι of the seventh word from the cross (Luke xxiii. 46) with 2 Tim. i. 12; 1 Pet. iv. 19, and 2 Tim. iv. 18 with Matt. vi. 13.

As to the Gospel with which we are now more directly concerned, and which the Church has always attributed to St. Matthew, a denial of its authorship has been based upon the tone of the evangelist in describing the call of St. Matthew in the ninth chapter.¹ "It is impossible," writes Schenkel, "to conceive a colder or more impersonal narrative. It is much easier to suppose the statement in St. Luke to be his, with such a vivid touch as this—'Levi made Him a great feast in his own house.'²" The answer to such an objection is to be found in the instinctive sentiment, which made those who had stood in the presence of the Holy One almost annihilate themselves before Him. There is a spirit which loves placard and advertisement, which multiplies tracts of which the heroes are puny or questionable saints, who write interminable experiences with eyes alternately turned to heaven, and peering to see who is listening behind the half-opened door. It was not so with Christ's Apostles. Their motto was—"He must increase, I must decrease." It has been beautifully conjectured that St. Matthew leaves the Parable of the Pharisee and Publican to be recorded by St. Luke, because he is the publican from whom it was drawn. The very fact that the narrative of St. Matthew is so sober and impersonal tells for, rather than against, its composition by the publican who became an apostle.

¹ St. Matthew ix. 9, 14.

² St. Luke v. 29.

It will be observed that our analysis, so far as it is correct, establishes the unity of the authorship of this Gospel. This has been impugned by a host of modern writers. The comparatively timid rationalism of the beginning of the century hinted that the first two chapters came from another hand. Ewald, about forty years ago, printed the first Gospel in five different types, that the reader might have before his eyes the fragments of which it is composed. Hingelfeld assigns it to two authors,—one earlier, one later; one forcing Christianity into a Jewish mould, the other handling it in the broader spirit of St. Paul. Köstlein asserts that it was put together from three pieces, the Syro-Chaldaic original of St. Matthew, the primitive Mark, and Galilean tradition. Schenkel very similarly analyses it into a composite of a document called the "primitive Mark"; of a second document supposed to be spoken of by Papias as τὰ λόγια; and, added to this, of a certain amount of oral tradition.

Such theories are refuted to a candid mind, even by those subordinate traits which are to a composition what the play and trick of features is to the living face, giving it individuality and character. The transitions in St. Matthew's narrative have been called by M. Réville "simple, almost infantine." Be it so. But the τότε ("then") repeated more than fifty times, shows that one hand, however untutored, was at work. "I believe," says M. Réville again, "that no writer ever felt happier in his work." Certainly, the writer has throughout a simple, happy admiration for the things which he relates, and many of which he had seen. It is the same man throughout who gazes with a rapture that never tires. "Lo!" and "Behold!" rushes to his lips more than thirty times in this short book. The star of the Epiphany is in the east, do you not see it? "Lo! the star." The Lord is on the holy mount; the cloud of glory descends upon the hill. "Behold! there appeared unto them Moses and Elias. Behold! a bright cloud overshadowed them. Behold! a voice out of the cloud." It is Easter morning. The women go to tell the disciples¹—"Behold! Jesus met them." The evangelist has been accused by others of being a sort of diffuse and garrulous Herodotus among the four, passionately fond of legend and miracle. The wonders of the Infancy, the walking of Peter on the sea, the stater in the fish's mouth, the dream of Pilate's wife, the bodies of the saints reappearing after the Resurrection, the marvels at the sepulchre, have been appealed to against St. Matthew's credibility; but, if they testify to his individuality, let them at least vouch for his existence.

¹ See the eloquent passage in M. Réville's "Question des Évangiles." Revue des Deux Mondes, June 1, 1866.

Even such subordinate traits led us to the conclusion that it is one mind which addresses us. How much more must we reject the theory that this Gospel is a thin substratum of original writings,—beneath a stupendous layer of myths, discourses evolved out of the Church's consciousness, and agglomerated fragments of other documents,—when we perceive that the whole mass of the composition is not only thinly traversed by particular lines of thought, but moulded and shaped throughout by certain Leading Ideas.

2. It remains to apply practically what has been said of this Gospel as a whole.

(a) There is an eternal freshness in it. Pharisees washing their hands, and making the phylactery very broad and the tassel very long; pedantic scribes, mocking human nature with subtleties fine and glossy, but sharp and piercing as threads of glass; the haughty priests of a corrupt establishment, and its sceptical and mocking Sadducees; the wild demoniac; the publican, the man seemingly dead and buried in material pursuits, yet obeying the "call of Jesus"; the woman of Bethany, pouring from her broken heart perfumes which were dearer to Christ than the hoarded nard; these are the shapes, "touching and terrible," that were never forged, which live and speak to successive generations.¹

The spirit of hypocrisy, of Pharisaism, of hollow sanctimonious and hierarchical pretension, is lasting as human nature. It is scathed in St. Matthew's Gospel; no doubt of it. Only do not let us be put off by dress. We look out for the successors of Chief Priests, of Scribes and Pharisees, in copes and chasubles, in the priest's surplice or the prelate's lawn. We may find them in other quarters, among the sentimental professors of a liberal and unsectarian Christianity, not less than among the defenders of a dogmatic creed.

Neither let us be hasty in drawing from the condemnation of formalism in St. Matthew a condemnation of forms. It is interesting to notice that the verses which put in the sharpest and clearest way the relation of the external to the spiritual element in religion are peculiar to this Gospel. "All the virgins," in the parable, "arose and trimmed their torches," cleared the wick in the vessel, and arranged the garlands¹ around the staff which bore it; "all the virgins," the wise no less than the foolish. But "they that were foolish took no oil; the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps." Christ would have neither the form without the spirit, nor the dogma without the life; neither the lamp without the oil, nor the oil without the lamp. Without the lamp, the oil will be wasted; without the oil, the lamp will not burn.

¹ M. Réville, ibid. pp. 639, 640.

(b) It is this first verse that gives such fulness of significance to all this Gospel. It is because He is Jesus Christ, Son of Abraham and David, that His discourses are what they are—everlasting, powerful, the inner law of Christian society and civilization, the creative source of new courage, new thoughts, new enterprises, new saints, new apostles, new martyrs. This Gospel is not the life of a dead man. It is the specimen of an eternal life manifested upon earth for a while, by which we come to know in some measure what He is Who is our Lord. This is why it is that to leave off reading the daily lesson or chapter is to forget Christ, and with Him purity and goodness. This is why so many in the evening of their days, as they look back with bitter self-accusation, remember that the time which they most deplore coincided exactly with the time when, by shutting up their New Testament, they shut out Christ's presence from their lives. Yet, thank God, we know Him, or we may know Him. We may know Him as the leper knew Him ; as Peter did, when with the spray in his hair, and the storm-light on his face, he cried, " Lord ! save me ; " as Galilee knew Him, when He went about doing good. Still above the clouds that hang over the Church and the world He is the light, the dawn and Morning Star of each new era, until the final revelation, when, over the last clouds going up from a burning world, the sign shall appear. Still the shadow of the Man of sorrows hangs over the sick. Still worship is the dialogue between Him and the soul which He has redeemed with such a price.¹ Still as we kneel at the Holy Communion Sunday after Sunday, or in the stillness of the room where our dear ones lie, the Eucharist of the upper chamber is with us, as it was with those who heard and saw Him. Still those words are comfortable as of old—" come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

¹ ἐκόσμησαν. St. Matthew xxv. 7.

(c) It follows, as a matter of course, that in receiving St. Matthew's Gospel the Church commits herself to a definite and very exalted view of Jewish history and prophecy. To this view, indeed, she is committed with her very life, because her Master is so committed. Whatever theories may be formed of possible limitations of His human knowledge, to suppose Him ignorant of a matter so directly bearing upon the purpose of His mission, is to suppose Him fatally incompetent for the execution of the very work which He came to perform. The Church will follow the course of all true criticism of the Hebrew Scriptures with a deep and reverent interest, without panic and without perturbation, with fearless patience and with perfect impartiality. All that is proved she will accept, and find her vision enlarged. All that is conjectural, however exquisitely ingenious, she will let pass with a sigh or with a smile. The spirit of the first Gospel will help her to discriminate in Judaism that which is accidental and merely part of the equipment of preparation from that which is living and eternal. The first of these elements of Judaism is like the rusted anchor which lies upon the shore, or like the torn and sodden nest in the wood. The second is like the vessel which the anchor once held, now moving far away upon the sea; or like the bird, once helpless in the nest, now exulting in its liberty. More and more the Church will be guided, not so much to learn Christ from the Old Testament as to learn the Old Testament from Christ; not so much to learn the New Testament through the Old, as to learn the Old Testament through the New.

¹ See Pressensé. Vie de Jésus, in the closing pages.

NOTE I.—I. 2 (a).

ST. MATTHEW II. 1-2.

IT is instructive to remark in this portion of St. Matthew's narrative the historically restrained character of that very portion of the Gospel which might seem to be most peculiarly near the dream-land of legend. Let us note two points: (a) That there is no exaggeration about the star or meteor. (b) That no prophecy of the Epiphany is alleged.

(a) The star of the Epiphany early lent itself to embellishments, the occurrence of which in a genuine Gospel would at once have committed Christianity to a crushing defeat. A writer generally so sober as Ignatius, and who died only about fifty years after the publication of the first Gospel, writes as follows:—

πῶς οὖν ἐφανερῶθη τοῖς αἰῶσιν; ἀστὴρ ἐν οὐρανῷ ἔλαμψεν ὑπὲρ πάντας τοὺς ἀστέρας, καὶ τὸ φῶς αὐτοῦ ἀνεκλάλητον ἦν, καὶ ξενισμὸν παρείχεν ἡ καινότης αὐτοῦ· τὰ δὲ λοιπὰ πάντα ἄστρα ἅμα ἡλίφ καὶ σελήνῃ χορὸς ἐγένετο τῷ ἀστέρι, αὐτὸς δὲ ἦν ὑπερβάλλων τὸ φῶς αὐτοῦ ὑπὲρ πάντα· ταραχὴ τε ἦν πόθεν ἡ καινότης ἡ ἀνόμοιος αὐτοῖς ὕθεν ἐλύετο πᾶσα μαγεία... Θεοῦ ἀνθρωπίνως φανερούμενου εἰς καινότητα ἀδίδιου ζωῆς· ἀρχὴν δὲ ἐλάμβανεν τὸ παρὰ Θεοῦ ἀπηρτισμένον (Epist. Ignat. ad Ephes. xix.). This is one of two passages where Ignatius goes beyond the Gospels. [λάβετε, ψηλαφήσατέ με, καὶ ἴδετε ὅτι οὐκ εἰμὶ δαιμόνιον ἀσώματον. ad Smyrn. iii. LIGHTFOOT, Apost. Fathers, Part II. Vol. ii. 295, 296: cf. St. Luke xxiv. 36-38, 39.]

A passage of lofty poetical grandeur on the subject of the star is contained in one of the Apocryphal Gospels (ἀνέβλεψα εἰς τὸν ἀέρα, καὶ εἶδον τὸν ἀέρα ἔκθαμβον. ἀνέβλεψα εἰς τὸν πόλον τοῦ οὐρανοῦ καὶ εἶδον αὐτὸν ἐστῶτα κ.τ.λ.—Protevang. Jacob. 18).

Evang. Apocryph. TISCHEND. p. 33. Bishop Lightfoot quotes Milton's :

“The stars with deep amaze Stand fixt in stedfast gaze.”

One must add that the impression of these magnificent sentences in the Protevang. Jac. is frittered away by a multitude of petty details and the usual theatricalism of these documents. Surely no writer of the class to which St. Matthew evidently belonged could have kept his fancy within bounds unless he had been restrained and sobered by the stern repression of truth. The very silence of an evangelist is inspired.

(b) The same restraint may be observed in another marked abstinence in the Epiphany narrative. It has become a commonplace of rationalistic criticism to say that “the Epiphany is a picture created by prophecy.” St. Matthew again and again in these opening scenes marks the prophetic pages with a coloured pencil. In the visit of the Magi we have an incident of surpassing imaginative beauty. All through the ages it has been glorified by pencil and song. Yet, singular to say, the Epiphany is the only scene in the sublime opening of the drama of the life of Jesus, for which St. Matthew claims no prophecy whatever. We are tempted to think that he might have referred to Balaam's language (Numbers xxiv. 17). The Church in her Epiphany services has seen the bending forms of kings in the dim magnificence of the language of psalmist and seer. (Psalm lxxii. 10-15; Isaiah lx. 6.) Still the fact remains that over the Epiphany alone in these two chapters St. Matthew makes us hear no joy-bells of prophecy filling the air. If he had foreseen that he would have been accused of translating a picture of prophecy into the language of fact, he could scarcely have taken a more effectual way of defending himself than by omitting between vv. 11 and 12 of chap. ii. his familiar formula ἵνα πληρωθῇ.

NOTE II

Dreams find a distinct mention in St. Matthew's Gospel. We have the dream of the wise men (ii. 12), of Joseph repeatedly (i. 20 ; ii. 13, 19, 22), of Pilate's wife (xxvii. 19). To St. Matthew, with his deep view of prophecy, the dream may have seemed the faint reflection of it vouchsafed to pure souls outside the theocracy. (ii. 12 ; xxvii. 19.) Joseph, the carpenter, like another Joseph (Genesis xxxvii. 5-12), is a dreamer of dreams, and thus, even in sleep, is a fitting "sentinel at the door of the Infant-king." The moral and spiritual uses of dreams might well form a practical chapter in a complete treatise on Christian psychology. The first Lord Lytton, in one of his earlier writings, remarks upon the notices of the stealthy growth of evil passions afforded by dreams. A great Christian thinker has left some precious pages upon this night-side of human nature. "Bad people," he says, "cannot well have good dreams. And good dreams are much truer signs of a man than bad dreams." "Dreams," writes Archbishop Laud, "are not in the power of him that hath them, but in the unruliness of fancy, which in broken sleep wanders which way it pleases, and shapes what it pleases." Mr. Mozley¹ further remarks the "affectionate and devotional character in Laud's dreams." e. g. "Sunday night. My dream of my blessed Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. One of the most comfortable passages I ever had in my life." To dream of Christ is to dream like Joseph, and probably to live like Joseph. The amplification of the message about her dream sent by Claudia Prœcula, Pilate's wife, is considered by Tischendorf to throw some real light upon that incident. (Evang. Apoc. 189, 190.)

¹ Mozley's Essays, 148-150.

III

THE LEADING IDEAS OF ST. MARK'S GOSPEL

“The beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God.”—
ST. MARK i. 1.

I

WE may, probably, best arrive at the Leading Ideas of St. Mark's Gospel by a notice of his main characteristics.

1. The main characteristic of this evangelist is his vividness, that quality which an eloquent critic has thus described in Mr. Carlyle's historical writings:—“He is great in single figures and striking episodes, but wants gradation and continuity. He sees history as it were by flashes of lightning. A single scene, a single figure is minutely photographed. Every tree and stone, almost every blade of grass, the attitude or expression of a principal figure, the gestures of a momentary passion, everything leaps into vision under that sudden glare.”¹

¹ Mr. Lowell. My Study Windows.

(a) If St. Matthew loves to lead us back to the past, with St. Mark that past seems to become living. Hence he constantly uses the present tense in his narrative.

(b) "Immediately"¹ is his "catchword." In two cases, at least, it is repeated three times in three consecutive verses. It occurs not less than forty-two times in this short book.

(c) The double negative is constantly found.

(d) When he records the language of any persons who are introduced into the narrative it is frequently almost dramatic in its liveliness. Often, indeed, sentences preserved by him reproduce the hurry and eagerness of the moment. We seem to hear the fluttered words, spoken with a beating heart by one panting for breath. To select one example. "I see men as trees walking," may be resolved into three sentences. "I see men." "I see them still and unmoving as trees." "I now see them walking."² The ἐγώ of the evil spirit (not "let us alone," but the "alas," the sigh of immortal anguish); the οὐά of the revilers, who pass by the sufferers on the cross, is set down by St. Mark.³

(e) Life-like details drop from his pencil, until narratives for which there are parallels in the other synoptics, seem to be pre-eminently his. Witness

¹ εὐθὺς.

² Bishop Wordsworth on St. Mark viii. 24.

³ St. Mark i. 24; xv. 29.

the leper "beseeching Him and kneeling down to Him;"¹ and three successive tempests in the fourth and fifth chapters,—the storm in the lake, the storm in the demoniac's soul, the storm of sorrow in the troubled hearts of a bereaved home. The narrative abounds in pictorial touches. We may remind ourselves of these. The veil of the heavens rent over the baptism of Jesus.² The "green grass" in the wilderness, and the companies disposed like garden plots.³ In the night, upon the hill, under the vault of heaven, the brightness which surpasses art, and which nature can only match in her aspects of most delicate beauty, "exceeding white as snow, so as no fuller on earth can whiten them;" the epileptic boy, who wallowed groaning, and the father crying with tears, at the foot of the mountain, in the common day.⁴ Jesus "going before" the disciples on the way to Jerusalem.⁵ The lowering and fallen looks⁶ of him who came running and knelt to Jesus, contrasted with the loving expression of the Master's face.⁷ The name of Bartimæus, his casting away the garment in which he was wrapped, and springing up toward Christ;⁸ the encouraging word of those who hailed Bartimæus, "be of good comfort, rise, He calleth thee."⁹ The fig-tree withered upward

¹ St. Mark i. 40.

² Ibid. i. 10, σχιζομένου.

³ πρασιαὶ πρασιαί. Ibid. vi. 39, 40.

⁴ Ibid. ix. 3, 17, 18 sqq.

⁵ Ibid. x. 32.

⁶ Ibid. x. 17.

⁷ Ibid. vv. 17, 21.

⁸ Ibid. ver. 46 sqq.

⁹ Ibid. v. 49.

from the roots.¹ The figure of the Lord, sitting over against the treasury, and praising her who gave the mite which has borne such accumulated interest.² That other picture of Him, sitting upon the Mount of Olives, over against the temple, and joining in His discourse the end of that august pile with the end of the world, in words before whose majesty the genius of Shakespeare himself, in his latest and most perfect lines, seems weak :—

“The gorgeous towers, the cloud-capt palaces,
The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolve.”³

The young man so enthusiastically following Jesus, so quickly flying from danger.⁴ The High Priest, stung with anger, rising and springing forward into the midst with unpriestly fury.⁵ Peter warming himself towards the fire, with the blaze showing the working of his features;⁶ then flinging himself into the thought of his sin, and sobbing long and loud.⁷ The simple grandeur of the words—“when the centurion saw that He so cried out, and gave up the ghost, he said, Truly this man was the Son of God.”⁸ The stone seen

¹ St. Mark xi. 21.

² Ibid. xii. 41 sqq.

³ Ibid. xiii. 3 sqq.

⁴ xiv. 51, 52.

⁵ ἀναστὰς ὁ ἀρχιερεὺς εἰς μέσον. xiv. 60.

⁶ θερμαινόμενος πρὸς τὸ φῶς. xiv. 54.

⁷ ἐπιβαλὼν. xiv. 72. This is differently explained by some. “Drawing his mantle over his head (the Oriental hyke) he began to weep.”—STANLEY on I Corinthians xi. 7.

⁸ St. Mark xv. 39.

through the doubtful light of the earliest dawn—"for it was very great."¹

(f) Hence, also, we naturally find in St. Mark those personal traits of our Lord which could only have come from an eye-witness, or from one who writes under the guidance of an eye-witness, and reproduces his reverential love. Syro-Chaldaic words which dropped from the lips of Jesus are preserved.² St. Mark is the artist who has finished that perfect figure which our Church places over her baptisteries. "Having taken up the children in His arms and put His hands on them, He blesses them," rains down blessings on them,—a word which, in the LXX., so rich in terms of benediction, does not occur, and in the New Testament here only.³

As life goes on with most of us, there are moments when the look of those we love comes back upon us. Their sympathy, their grief, their noble indignation, speak to us from unforgotten features, when the curtain is drawn aside for a moment from the picture gallery of memory. A son will suddenly remember, in after years, a sigh which his father heaved, perhaps over his wilfulness or sin. This Gospel is a record of the looks of Jesus.⁴ We may

¹ St. Mark xvi. 4.

² Ibid. v. 41; vii. 34; xv. 34. Most remarkably of all xiv. 36.

³ κατευλογεῖ. x. 16. The word, however, is found in Tobit twice—Tobit x. 12; xi. 12.

⁴ St. Mark iii. 34; viii. 33; x. 21, 23; xi. 11; cf. vii. 34, the sigh of Jesus.

refer to one passage because an unjust inference has been drawn from it. "There is an expression in Mark," says Schenkel, "which shows that before His last entry into Jerusalem, Christ had never attended a festival there. Upon His arrival He betook Himself to the Temple and looked round about upon all things.¹ Therefore, until then, He had never seen the edifice at hand. But this is quite inconsistent with John, who tells us of His having driven the traders from the Temple at the very beginning of His career." How much more truly did our Christian poet understand St. Mark :

"On Sunday eve, with many a palm,
With many a chant divine,
It came, that eye so keen and calm,
Like a still lamp, far-searching aisle and shrine."

It is not the stranger's look of curiosity. It is the anticipation of the victim ; it is the visitation of the Judge.

(g) Equally, perhaps, with St. Luke, St. Mark ventures to tell how the Son of God felt, how "He was moved with compassion ;" "perceived in His spirit ;" "looked round about with anger, being grieved ;" "called unto Him whom He would ;" "marvelled at unbelief ;" "was much displeased ;" "beholding, loved ;" "sighed deeply in His spirit."²

¹ περιβλεψάμενος πάντα. xi. 11. See Schenkel, Characterbild, p. 342.

² i. 41 ; ii. 8 ; iii. 5 ; iii. 13 ; vi. 6 ; x. 14, 21 ; viii. 12. One of St. Mark's objects seems to be to bring out the self-imposed limitations of the Redeemer's knowledge and power in the days of (h) Nor is this vividness merely the product of an opulent fancy. It is the consistency in details of a picture, whose central figure is "drawn in lines of fire." Those rapid and decided touches are inspired by a conviction of the love, the glory, and the strength of "Jesus, the Son of God." The canvas may seem to a merely critical eye to be overcrowded, the facts to be hurriedly accumulated. But if there is the hurry, there is also the glow and energy of life. There are words that flash out like the sword of God. High above all towers the one central figure. The natural blindness and littleness of the disciples, nowhere else so fully exhibited, enhances His majesty. They who cried with fear, when the gust from the mountains which they knew so well swept the waters of the lake on which they had rocked from childhood, enhance by contrast the calmness of Him who says to wind and wave—"peace, be still!"¹ In no other evangelist does the divine death stand out with nobler elevation than in the quiet and tremendous simplicity of St. Mark's narrative.

2. The influence of St. Peter upon this Gospel (attested by antiquity with one voice) may be repeatedly traced in its peculiarities. We can

His flesh. St. Mark vi. 6 compared with Matt. xiii. 58 is very striking. Cf. also i. 45; v. 31 (St. Luke viii. 45, 46); iii. 20; vii. 24; xiii. 32. The entirely divine non possumus, the almighty οὐ δύναμαι of St. John v. 29, 30 belongs to a different sphere.

¹ St. Mark iv. 39.

hear throughout the voice of the Apostle, who wrote, "Marcus, my son."¹

(a) We not unfrequently find minute pieces of information, which must apparently have come from St. Peter. Most remarkable of all, however, is the humility, the self-effacement of the holy Apostle.² It is striking, indeed, to compare his confession, and what follows it, in the eighth chapter of St. Mark with the sixteenth chapter of St. Matthew. St. Mark omits much of St. Peter's noble words, omits the marvellous attestation, omits the astonishing promise, yet gives the rebuke in its most pointed form.³ His accurate note of the second crowing of the cock aggravates the Apostle's guilt, because it shows that the first had failed to awaken his conscience.⁴

(b) To us there seems to be something very remarkable in the coincidence of the primitive Gospel of St. Peter (already referred to at some length) with the skeleton of the beginning of the second Gospel—"That saying ye yourselves know, which was published throughout all Judæa beginning from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached; how God anointed Jesus of Nazareth."⁵ So spoke St. Peter. Hence it will be seen that the initial mould and type of the Gospel of St. Mark is entirely Petrine. That Gospel has three definite starting-points, local and temporal. (1) St. Mark takes his first departure from John's baptism: "John did baptize in the wilderness."¹ (2) The second note, a local one, is Galilee, and connects itself with the chronological mark of being subsequent to John's baptism. "Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the Gospel of the kingdom of God."² (3) A third special word is one that connects Jesus with Nazareth: "In those days Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee."³ The two schemes, the two ways of looking at the great Ministry in its beginnings, are in absolute accordance. They come either from the same mind, or from two minds habituated to the same region of Christological thought.

¹ St. Peter v. 13.

² The only apparent exception is the addition of the three words (καὶ τῷ Πέτρῳ) in the angel's message to the women (Mark xvi. 7); cf. Matt. xxviii. 7.

³ St. Mark viii. 33. ⁴ Ibid. xiv. 72. ⁵ Acts x. 37-38.

(c) Indeed, St. Peter's addresses, recorded in the second and tenth chapters of the Acts, prove that this is just such a Gospel as he would have dictated or inspired. Both are direct and practical in their tendency. Both dwell mainly on the objective facts of the Gospel. Both exhibit the Lord's life as a career of active benevolence.

¹ St. Mark i. 2-11.

² St. Mark i. 14.

³ St. Mark i. 9.

II

These characteristics of style and origin are well suited to bring out the Leading Ideas and primary object of the Gospel.

I. Its Leading Ideas.

(a) One of these is, that Jesus is Lord, not only of nature and the world of spirits, not only of storms and diseases, but of the sick, stormy, guilty, sorrowing, passionate, ignorant, yet yearning heart of man. He speaks; men are "astonished and amazed." He moves from place to place; wherever He goes, He is the magnet of the human soul. "All men seek for Him." Even when He is shrouded far in the silence of the desert, even when He is in the house, "He cannot be hid."¹ Still as He walks His way of life, rays of supernatural light stream from the sky, that is usually so cold and passionless, round the pathway of the Galilean peasant. They fear, as we all fear, when the sound of the tide of eternity suddenly breaks upon our ear, and we see for a moment the heaving and glimmer of its awful waves. "They fear exceedingly," and "are astonished with a great astonishment," and "are sore amazed in themselves." As that master-hand sweeps without effort the chords of the human soul, its deepest and finest tones—amazement, wonder,

¹ St. Mark vii. 24.

reverence, trust, adoration—answer to the marvellous touch.¹

(b) A second Leading Idea of St. Mark's Gospel is, that the life of Jesus is a life of alternate rest and victory, withdrawal and working.

So, in the first chapter, we find the retirement in Nazareth, the coming forth to be baptized; the withdrawal into the wilderness, the walk in Galilee; the rest in the cool sanctuary, where the dawn breaks upon the kneeling man, and the going forth to preach to the heated and struggling crowd. Thus, once more, the withdrawal to the Mount of Olives is followed by the great conflict of the redeeming Passion, while that is succeeded by the withdrawal into the sepulchre. It is the book of the wars of the Lord and the rest of the Lord. The first rest was in Nazareth; the first trophies were the four Apostles. The last rest is in the heaven of heavens, "in the privacy of glorious light"; the last victory (for this great book never ended with the words "they were afraid") is diffused over all time—"the Lord working with them, and confirming the work with signs following."

¹ This conviction of the power of Jesus lies at the root of the right interpretation of one passage which has seemed specially perplexing. Mark vii. 18, 19, is to be taken as follows: "And He saith unto them ('Are ye so without understanding also? do ye not perceive that whatsoever thing . . . goeth out into the draught?'), purging all meats," i. e. He saith to them all the words in parenthesis from οὕτως καὶ ὑμεῖς (v. 18) down to ἐκπορεύεται (v. 19). He saith this to them; and by this saying, He, the God of nature and of the law, at one sweep "maketh all meats clean." The cleansing is contemporaneous with the saying.

2. As to the primary object of St. Mark's Gospel.

St. Mark addressed himself specially to the Latin element in humanity.

The origin of this Gospel was placed in Rome by Clement of Alexandria, and connected by him with St. Peter's labours in that city. Though there is no authority for the story that it was written in Latin (which would not have been necessary in the early Roman Church), it contemplates the Latin race, and is addressed to Latin thought.

The second Gospel contains several Latin words ;¹ some of them, as we are occasionally told with a peculiar sneer, "somewhat imperfectly Grecized." In one instance the names of two individuals are mentioned, who would be known to members of the Roman Church—Alexander and Rufus.²

But we have something which lies much deeper than these somewhat superficial indications.

The Roman temperament was eminently practical. "Their earliest character," it has been said, "was steady agricultural thrift. This was turned into the steady pursuit of conquest, and all by the practical method and spirit."³ A powerful writer on the subject remarks that "the old Roman religion is the most practical that ever existed." He points, in confirmation, to their worship, which was symbolical and undogmatic; to their deities, who, so far as they were of the Roman stamp, were virtues personified; to their pontiffs, who were largely charged with legal and material interests; to their Lectisternia, which were rather repasts for social union than religious banquets; to their whole idea of the gods, which was that of a hostile nation of indisputable strength.¹ There can be no doubt, however, that at the time of our Lord's Ministry, the Roman mind had begun to be honeycombed by scepticism.

¹ ii. 4; vi. 8; vii. 4; xii. 41, 42; xv. 16, 39, 44. Roman customs are referred to, x. 12; xiv. 30, and Jewish customs explained, vii. 1 sqq.; the equivalent in Roman money of a Greek piece is given xii. 42. ² xv. 21; cf. Romans xvi. 13. ³ Mr. Carlyle.

In St. Mark's Gospel, accordingly, we find not so much the highest ideas explanatory of facts, as facts themselves. The whole Gospel is a commentary on one epithet, the use of which in the first line of In Memoriam has been stigmatized as an affectation—"Strong Son of God!" Throughout, the notion of strength is kept in view. Never was hell stronger on earth than when Jesus taught in Galilee. There are times when the usual equilibrium of moral and spiritual life is disturbed; when we are tempted to ask, with Bishop Butler, why whole masses of men should not go mad at once; or to say with the French physician, as he looked upon a population, half of them stupefied and another half frantic, that they are seized with epidemic insanity. Such a time was that when Jesus walked upon earth. In the lurid darkness of cras like these, Satan finds a home in the seething human soul. Nowhere is the personality of evil spirits, the interpenetration of the human consciousness by them, more clearly noted than by St. Mark.¹ Nowhere is Satan so emphatically the strong one, —Jesus the stronger. But this strength is not the strength of magic with its formulæ and incantations. The second Gospel is pervaded by an intense conviction that it is His word which is so mighty. The weapon of victory is the “new teaching,”² the assurance of forgiveness that penetrates the nervous system as with an electric stream, and works from within outwardly.³ To the Roman admiration of strength and heroism, as well as to the scepticism of its then exhausted speculation, St. Mark seems to say,—Here is a plain account—so plain and straightforward that it cannot be suspected—of the words and works of Jesus Christ. You admire power, and make ambition virtue. With His calm superhuman eye He sees through it, and knows its littleness. For Him conquerors and kings are “they who are accounted to rule over the Gentiles”—those who seem to themselves and others to rule, while they are the slaves of irresistible circumstances and unresisted lusts.¹ Here is a holier heroism, here is a stronger strength, here is a royalty of love. Here is the victory of Him Whom one of your own rough centurions declared to be really the Son of God; Who was crowned with the twisted thorn, and stood in the Prætorium, and had the faded purple of one of your soldiers flung upon Him, but is now set down at the right Hand of God, and strongly works with the Church, which you see strongly advancing to her victory.²

¹ "La Théocratie Romaine." Par M. Henri Rucher. Revue des Deux Mondes, May 15, 1871.

¹ Note the masculine participle with the neuter noun, ix. 20, 26; cf. i. 22, 23; v. 2.

² διδασχὴ καινὴ. i. 27.

³ ii. 5.

III

If we venture to express respectful regret that St. Augustine should have appeared to speak as if St. Mark was simply the "pedisequus et breviator Matthæi;" we do it for the purpose of drawing out our immediate subject more fully.

1. It will be useful to bring together certain words of our Lord, and certain incidents in His ministry, which are peculiar to St. Mark. We shall then be able to decide whether the second synoptical evangelist is merely the epitomizer of St. Matthew.

2. Without the Gospel according to St. Mark,

¹ οἱ δοκοῦντες ἄρχειν. St. Mark x. 42.

² Riggensbach gives a sentence curiously illustrative of this view of Mark's as a practical Gospel answering to the Roman character: "As the interpreter of the Apostle of action, St. Mark describes the Son of God in the power of His actions to the Romans who are the people of action."—(Riggensbach, Leben Jesu, ii. 50.)

the Church would have lost these among other sayings of Jesus.

We should not have possessed the great axiom (the safeguard at once against superstition and irreverence in regard to all positive institutions whatever)—“the sabbath was made for man, not man for the sabbath.”¹ The two great words would be away—“peace, be still!”² Something surely would be wanting to the parables, if we had lost that exquisite illustration of the development of God’s kingdom; the seed growing, not mechanically or in virtue of cultivation, but from within outwardly, by the energy of its hidden life.³ Here, too, we see one ray of moral light falling upon the corruption from which the fastidious imagination turns away sickened.⁴ Here, again, in its fullest and most emphatic form, stands that saying which has nerved so many of God’s children to face the syllogism, the epigram, and the scaffold. In St. Luke—“whosoever shall be ashamed of Me and Mine;”⁵ in St. Mark—“whosoever shall be ashamed of Me and My words in this adulterous and sinful generation.”⁶ In this Gospel only stand the closing words of Isaiah⁷ taken up and thrice

¹ ii. 27.

² iv. 39.

³ St. Mark iv. 26, 29. The αἱ περὶ τὰ λοιπὰ ἐπιθυμίαι is an important addition to Matt. xii. 22. Luke viii. 14.

⁴ καθαρῶν πάντα τὰ βρώματα. St. Mark vii. 19.

⁵ τοὺς ἐμούς. St. Luke ix. 26.

⁶ St. Mark viii. 38.

⁷ Isaiah lxvi. 24.

repeated—"where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched." Here alone occurs in its perfect form that awful image, derived at once from the Jewish ritual and from the realm of nature. The Judge of mankind tells us that as every offering was offered with salt,¹ so every human soul must be seasoned by the flame of self-sacrifice and sanctified suffering, or by that of wrath; that it must be bathed in heavenly fire, or preserved undying in the fire of hell—"every one shall be salted with fire, and every sacrifice shall be salted with salt;"² that the sharp salt of *inner*³ self-sacrifice, can alone preserve us from moral putrefaction, and teach us the secret of true peace with others. Peculiar to St. Mark's version of the discourse upon the last things, is that sudden reiterated note as of a trumpet, or tolling as of a bell—"take ye heed, watch and pray; watch ye therefore; watch."⁴ In the same connection we must not forget three memorable words. He Who in the unity of that undivided Person is God and Man sometimes speaks as if (to use human language) He forgot that He was not in heaven, looking upon all things in the calmness of the perfect and eternal light: sometimes, again, as

¹ How powerful is St. Mark's rendering of ἄλας μωρανθῆ (St. Matthew v. 13; St. Luke xiv. 34)—τὸ ἄλας ἀναλον, "salt that is unsalted." (St. Mark ix. 50.)

² St. Mark ix. 44, 50.

³ ἔχετε ἐν ἑαυτοῖς ἄλα, καὶ εἰρηνεύετε ἐν ἀλλήλοις.—v. 50.

⁴ xiii. 33, 35, 37.

if earth were indeed His home for a season, as if His prospects were bounded for a while by our lower horizon. "Of that day or hour knoweth none, neither angel in heaven, nor the Son, but the Father only."¹ Let it not be forgotten that the word of commendation is found in St. Mark exclusively, which, even within the last few years, dwelt as a burning fire in one woman's heart,² enabling her to persevere in a work for the pauper-sick, which will never pass away—"she hath done what she could."³ Here also we find the definite prediction to St. Peter—"even in this night, before the cock crow twice."⁴

3. Nor can the incidents peculiar to the Gospel fairly entitle us to say of St. Mark—solus ille perpauca.⁵

¹ xiii. ver. 32. On the reading here, see N. T. Tisch. (Edit. vii. p. 292.)

² Agnes Jones.

³ St. Mark xiv. 8.

⁴ Ibid. ver. 30.

⁵ Ewald (not without some reason) looks upon the second Gospel as claiming something like superior importance in the record of miraculous cures (vii. 31-37; viii. 22-26; ix. 14-29), and dis-possession of demoniacs (v. 1-20). He also remarks upon the use of external things; upon certain pathological inquiries; upon sweet, encouraging, soothing looks and touches, which afford a sort of intermediate ground between the natural treatment and the supernatural healings (v. 27; vi. 13, 55, 56; ix. 21, 22; v. 41; vii. 34; i. 31-41; v. 41; vi. 5; vii. 32; viii. 23, 25; ix. 27—undisturbed quiet with the patient, v. 37. Possibly some training in the therapeutic part of the ministry of the disciples may be implied, iii. 15; vi. 7). It may be added that two thoughts about these cures are specially brought out by St. Mark. (1) That Jesus conditioned and limited His own power

Those incidents are the following :—

The second Adam with the wild beasts in the wilderness, while the whole forty days are filled up with one long silent suggestion of the evil one;¹ His mother and brethren taking steps to arrest Him, on the score of ecstatic absorption;² His sleeping in the storm on the pillow;³ that one ray of light in the other storm, "He saw them toiling in rowing;"⁴ the restoration of the deaf man with an impediment in his speech, and of the blind man of Bethsaida;⁵ His design of remaining hidden in a house; His return to the sea of Galilee; the disciples having one loaf with them in the ship;⁶ the history of His work along the Gaulonite range, east of Jordan; His speaking openly the sayings about His Passion;⁷ the sudden disappearing of the heavenly visitants from the Mount of Transfiguration, "the questioning one with another what the rising from the dead should mean," the awe of the multitude at the yet unfaded brightness of His countenance;⁸ the loving displeasure against the

by the faith of the patient (vi. 5, 6; ix. 23). (2) That, as He often experienced ingratitude for His works of love (St. Luke xvii. 17), so He sensitively felt it (St. Mark ix. 19). Some toil accompanied this part of His work; possibly great expenditure of vital energy (St. Mark v. 30; cf. St. Luke vi. 19; viii. 46). He healed from perfect love and pity, even where gratitude was wanting.

¹ St. Mark i. 13.

² Ibid. iii. 21, ὅτι ἐξέστη.

³ Ibid. iv. 38.

⁴ Ibid. vi. 48.

⁵ Ibid. vii. 32 sqq.; viii. 22 sqq.

⁶ Ibid. vii. 24, 31; viii. 14.

⁷ Ibid. viii. 32.

⁸ Ibid. ix. 8, 10, 15.

disciples who forbade the little children to come to Him;¹ the not suffering any vessel to be carried through the Temple;² the breaking of the alabaster box in the noble extravagance of love;³ the emphatic record that all drank of the Eucharistic cup;⁴ the repetition of the words in Gethsemane;⁵ the young man, probably St. Mark himself, who left the linen cloth, and fled away naked;⁶ the High Priest starting into their midst;⁷ Peter beneath in the palace;⁸ the first crowing of the cock;⁹ the names of the sons of the Cyrenian;¹⁰ and, finally, the special appearance to Mary Magdalene after the Resurrection.¹¹

But we find much more than isolated words, or traits of single incidents peculiar to the second Gospel. Narrow as the canvas is to which the painter has confined himself, there is one whole aspect of our Lord's work brought out with unapproached excellence by St. Mark. There are incidents of importance in which, when we compare him with the other synoptics, we recognize an actual superiority, not only in vividness of touch, but in apprehension of general purpose.

¹ St. Mark x. 14.

² Ibid. xi. 16.

³ Ibid. xiv. 3.

⁴ Ibid. ver. 23.

⁵ Ibid. ver. 39.

⁶ Ibid. ver. 51.

⁷ Ibid. ver. 60.

⁸ Ibid. ver. 66.

⁹ Ibid. ver. 68.

¹⁰ Ibid. xv. 21.

¹¹ Ibid. xvi. 9. To the incidents about St. Peter peculiar to the second Gospel add ibid. i. 36.

One great aspect of our Lord's earthly life, is that it was the life of a worker, a life of toil. All will admit this. But, when the thoughtful Christian comes to ask himself the foundation for the impression, he will probably find that St. Mark manages to produce it in the most effective way by a very simple expedient. He takes one specimen day of the Galilean ministry; and gives us the fullest record of one day of Jesus which is to be found in any evangelist outside the last great week.¹ What a day of work! The deep thought in the public teaching in the synagogue; the dread meeting with the powers of evil; the healing in the sick-room; the interspace for the little festival of home; the sin, sorrow, suffering, crowded before the door; the brief rest; the rising, while the dawn scarcely whitens over the desert; the refreshment of prayer; the intrusion upon that sacred solitude;² and then the work of preaching, pitying, helping, thinking, healing, closes in upon Him again with a circle which is at once as strong as adamant, and as light as air.³ It is from St. Mark that we learn to estimate in some degree the divine monotony of one of those golden days of God upon earth. We learn how truly that life was a life of toil. But the toil was brightened by love, elevated by hope, refreshed by prayer. Its divine enthusiasm was unmarred by the peevishness of lassitude, undimmed by the mechanical respectability of routine. It was like nature which at once works so incessantly, and wears such splendid dreams upon its face.

¹ St. Mark i. 21-39. Cf. this section with its parallel in St. Luke iv. 33-44.

² Ibid. i. 22, 23; 27-39; 31, 32; 34, 35; 36.

³ Ibid. 38, 39.

The superiority of the second evangelist in occasional grasp of thought as well as in vividness of narrative comes out most remarkably in the history of the rich ruler who runs to Jesus with his question.¹ Not only are his impetuosity of action, and the fallen lowering look upon his face immediately upon the imperious and exacting word of Jesus, drawn with St. Mark's usual vivid pencil.² The whole real difficulty is understood with the most profound intuition, and the very words preserved by our evangelist, which turn what might otherwise be but a perplexing paradox into the deepest and most universal of spiritual truths.³

¹ Cf. St. Mark x. 17-32, with St. Matthew xix. 16 sqq.; St. Luke xviii. 18 sqq.

² ἐκπορευομένου αὐτοῦ εἰς ὁδὸν προσδραμῶν εἰς καὶ γονυπετήσας κ.τ.λ. St. Mark x. 17; ὁ δὲ στυγνάσας ἐπὶ τῷ λόγῳ. v. 22.

³ Note the οἱ τὰ χρήματα ἔχοντες (v. 23) explained by τοὺς πεποιθότας ἐπὶ χρήμασι (v. 24). Observe also the penetration of the disciples' question—not "what rich man, then, can be saved?" (v. 26), but "who, then, can be saved?" (v. 26). Mark again the flood of light thrown upon the apparently hyperbolical exaggeration of the promise, by the two important words preserved in the second evangelist alone—μετὰ διωγμῶν (v. 30).

IV

In bringing together these sayings of our Lord or incidents in His life, which are peculiar to St. Mark's Gospel, we have no wish to evade the fact that, in the first three evangelists, there is a certain common basis of similar—or identical—sentences, words, and even formulæ.

This common element has been differently accounted for.

1. By some it has been explained on the ground that the synoptics used a common document, or documents. These, we are told, were the Logia or discourses, and a thin original edition of the second evangelist, the "proto-Mark," or Ur Marcus of certain German critics. The variations, according to some, are simply like the variations of musicians improvising on a given theme. The school of Tübingen gives them another origin. St. Matthew writes to refute St. Paul; St. Luke issues a Pauline manifesto. Incidents of the great life before which ages have bowed down and worshipped, are the misunderstood innuendos and manœuvres of "theological diplomacy." Texts which to the eyes of the weary and heavy laden, dim with tears of penitence and yearning, seem steeped in the soft light of eternal love, are rusty fragments of clumsy weapons, which were splintered centuries ago in ignoble polemical squabbles.

But there is another and much more reasonable way of accounting for these common elements, these "corpuscula evangelicæ historiæ." The disciples very early linked together certain portions of their Master's life, partly by the nature of the subject-matter, partly according to historical sequence. By a process of "natural elaboration" masses of this genuine Gospel tradition became rounded into a certain shape by the friction of constant repetition. As to the words of Jesus, their preservation need excite little surprise. No doubt there are discourses delivered from every pulpit of which few hearers can recall a thought, or an expression, a week after they are delivered. The painted fire of their artificial rhetoric melts away like a coloured cloud. Their correct and elegant periods leave no more trace than a child's finger on the tide over which he floats. But there are other discourses which few hearers can totally forget, and which some could reproduce years afterwards. They contain true "semina eternitatis." They grasp the whole moral and rational nature. They charm the imagination by throwing exquisite lights upon homely places, whose marvellous capacities of beauty we never suspected. They win the child's heart within the man by a pathos which appeals to "thoughts that lie too deep for tears." They subdue the conscience, because they are the expression of an eternal law.

They lay hold on the intellect by the exact correspondence between the idea and its investiture of words. They fasten themselves on the memory by that unaffected method, which is simply the apt distribution of a number of topics that may be referred to a common centre. Such, above all, were the words of Jesus—"the words that I speak unto you," He said, "they are spirit, and they are life." And the voice of sixty Christian generations answers—"Thou hast the words of eternal life." It is vain then to ask whether St. Matthew copied from St. Luke, or St. Luke from St. Matthew; whether Matthew is the "primitive" of Mark, or Mark of Matthew. Even without taking into account the promise of the Spirit to "bring all things to their remembrance whatsoever He had said unto them," such words from such a teacher could never completely perish from the earth.

But however this question of the origin of the common element in the synoptics is to be decided, the words and works of Christ, which have been preserved by St. Mark alone, are sufficiently numerous and significant to prove that he is not merely a mechanical epitomiser of St. Matthew's Gospel. If he sometimes appears as an abbreviator, he not seldom amplifies or even explains. He contributes his own proportion to the thoughts which are the life of Christendom. He brings out Leading Ideas which give a loftier elevation to the work and Person of the Son of God.

Nor need we hesitate to say that there are entire incidents, and groups of incidents, in which the second evangelist proves himself to be almost on a higher level than the others. (1) The wonderful section (comprising the retreat of the Apostles, the compassion of Jesus for the multitudes, the feeding of the five thousand, the lonely prayer of Jesus on the mountain, the walking upon the sea, the acts of miraculous benevolence in the country beyond) is drawn by St. Mark with unsurpassed grandeur. It is written with the repressed admiration of a half-hushed awe; it is not only vivid but majestic and sustained — yet with a majesty which is softened by a sense of the compassion and of the watchful help of Jesus.¹

(2) It has already been shown that when we compare the narratives of the rich young man in the synoptics we find St. Mark's not only touched with superior vividness, but pervaded by a superior penetration. The key to a real understanding of the whole incident is supplied by the second evangelist.²

¹ Cf. St. Mark vi. 34-56, with St. Matthew xiv. 13-36; St. John vi. 1-22 (St. Luke ix. 10-18, does not admit of full comparison with these parallels).

² Cf. St. Mark x. 17-32 (esp. 17, 21-24, 28-32, with St. Matthew xix. 16-30; St. Luke xviii. 18-31).

V

There are some practical lessons which may profitably close this discussion.

1. To an age and to men resembling those whom the second evangelist addressed, in being partly material, partly sceptical, appreciating keenly, however, that which is effective, Christ should be preached, with strong, grave, plain, manly, historical simplicity. We should follow St. Mark, as he lifts up his finger and points to a long succession of trophies over human misery and sin; to that glorious compassion which raised those who were fallen upon the field of life; to the sufferer dying, as one of old said, "so lordly"; to the victor at God's right hand, Whose mighty presence is with His Church, and enables her to fill the earth with the spirit of His words and the continuation of His works. There may be something beyond evidences of Christianity in the self-evidence of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God.

2. The second lesson which may be drawn from our survey is a theological one.

The text, and indeed the whole of St. Mark, shows us what the Gospel is.

The word Gospel occurs in the New Testament more than seventy times.¹ The underlying idea is always glad news, or joyful annunciation. A common view of hearing the Gospel is this. A man has been so unhappy as never to have listened to a faithful preacher up to a certain time. Then first he hears of God's eternal purpose, of an effectual calling by His Spirit working in due season, of conversion, of assurance, of perseverance. He feels uplifted from the lower earth, and set upon the rock that is higher than man. He cries aloud with joy. He is safe, because he knows that he is safe.

¹ As verb or substantive,

Now let us not be misunderstood. We will not speak lightly of statements, some of which are not only the stay and comfort of loving hearts, but eternally true, while others are only exaggerations of blessed and eternal truths. But be they true or be they false, or partly true and partly false or exaggerated, yet, as a matter of fact, they are not the Gospel—not that which the New Testament calls the Gospel. For the New Testament Gospel is this. The glad news that for us sinners, and for our salvation, the Word of God has taken the Manhood into God; taken the body, framed and moulded by the Spirit, to be the meet habitation of the Word; for us come upon earth; for us lived; for us wrought miracles; for us died; for us broken the prison-bars of the tomb; for us ascended; for us sent down the Holy Ghost.

We might appeal to the opening of the Epistle to the Romans; to the almost formal definition in the beginning of the fifteenth chapter of the

First Epistle to the Corinthians ;¹ to the structure and character of the four Gospels. But we need little proof beyond our motto. The word is a favourite with St. Mark. In commenting upon the opening verse Bengel observes that “the beginning of the Gospel is in the Baptist, the Gospel in the whole book.” But what Gospel? Simply the events from the Baptism of Jesus to His Death and Ascension.

Now, if this be the true idea of the Gospel, let us be assured that the Church preaches not this or that fragment of it, but the whole fully and unceasingly. By her great days of observance, by the Christian seasons, we have a living, permanent, continuous preaching of the Gospel, as St. Mark understood the word, taken up into the structure and texture of our lives, diffused round the circling year, emphasized by the festivities of home, borne into our hearts with the chiming of the parish church-bells. And this is reinforced by a daily recounting in the creed of those facts which are the Gospel, and by our daily and Eucharistic worship.

3. We may learn, supremely and above all, a lesson upon the conception which we are to form of Jesus.

His figure stands out from this short book. It is throughout the Gospel of Jesus, the Son of God.

¹ Rom. i. 2, 3, 4 ; I Cor. xv. 1-9.

A man must be holy to comprehend the holiness of Jesus.

Let us suppose the case of a sharp man, who has neither taste nor genius, standing before a great picture ; he will point out flaw after flaw in Raphael. Place one who has neither musical appreciation, nor modesty to admit it, where he must hear Beethoven. It is an unmeaning noise, which gives him a headache. Even so, the lower the moral and spiritual life may be, the less is Jesus understood and loved. To an easy, soft-mannered, hard-hearted man of the world ; to a subtle, bitter, selfish scholar, with the delicate intellectual egotism, and the fatal gift of analysis à outrance, Gethsemane and the cross may be a scandal or a mockery. The Gospel, which seems so poor and pale when we rise from the songs of poets and the reasonings of philosophers, is a test of our spirit. Let some ambitious students in philosophy—some who have been communing for hours with the immortal masters of history, charmed with the balanced masses and adjusted perspectives of the composition, speak out their mind plainly upon this writing of St. Mark. They will not place it very high upon their list. But let them turn to it tomorrow, when the end of their toil finds them disappointed men ; when sorrow visits them ; when as they put their hand upon the wall of their room, memory, like a serpent, starts out and strikes them.

Then they will recognize the infinite strength and infinite compassion of Jesus. Out of their weakness and misery, out of their disappointment, they will feel that here they can trust in a nobility that is never marred, and rest that tired heart of theirs upon a love that never fails, in the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God.

On the whole, then, in St. Mark we have not so much as in St. Matthew, the point of convergence of the prophetic rays in the Messiah, the Son of Abraham and David. Not so much as in St. Luke, the fairest of the children of men, Priest and victim, the teacher of grace and forgiveness. Not so much as in St. John, the Word made Flesh, floating in a robe of heavenly light. It is the Gospel whose emblem is the lion, whose Hero is full of divine love and divine strength. It is the history of Jesus which was addressed to the Romans to free them from the misery of scepticism, from the grinding dominion of iron superhuman force unguided by a loving will. Here, brief as it is, we have, in its essential germs, all the theology of the Church. Had every other part of the New Testament perished, Christendom might have been developed from this. A man's faith does not consist of the many things which he affects to believe or finds it useful to believe, but of the few things which he really believes, and with which he stands, fronting his own soul and eternity. This faith in the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is sufficient. Let us hold it fast, and we shall find the power of one of our Lord's promises which is peculiar to St. Mark. If we are called upon to "handle the serpents" or "to drink the deadly things"¹ of science and philosophy, we shall lift up the serpent as a standard of victory. The cup of poison shall not reach our heart as it reached the heart of Socrates, when the sun was going down behind the hill tops. "It shall not hurt you." Let us hold fast this Gospel in that which tries many who are undisturbed by speculative doubt—in conscious sinfulness, in the allurements of lust. Let us cling to it in the din of voices that fill a Church distracted by party-cries; and "He who has instructed His Church by the heavenly doctrine of His evangelist St. Mark, will grant that, being not like children carried away by every blast of vain doctrine, we shall be established in the truth of His holy Gospel." For the Church's summary of the essence of the second Gospel is that it is a Gospel which gives strength.

¹ St. Mark xvi. 18. [It is not, of course, intended to imply in a previous note that the mention of our Lord's wondering is peculiar to St. Mark. (See Matt. viii. 10; Luke vii. 9.)]

IV

THE LEADING IDEAS OF ST. LUKE'S GOSPEL

A

FROM THE CIRCUMSTANCES OF HIS LIFE

“The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost.”
—ST. LUKE xix. 10.

I

IT will be most convenient to begin by considering what we know of the circumstances of St. Luke's life, certainly, or at least with a high degree of probability.

It is practically certain that the third evangelist was a Gentile.¹ It is abundantly proved that he was in long and intimate relation with St. Paul,¹ not only on his missionary voyages, but at other times.² He was a physician, and had been in close connection of some kind with a distinguished Gentile, by name Theophilus.³ The fact is worthy of note. The Jews "were put in trust with the oracles of God";⁴ and through Jews (with the Hebrew Christian converts from Judaism.) These three names of one class are followed by three of a different class (i.e. non-Hebrew Christians)—Epaphras, Luke, and Demas. (Colossians iv. 10-15.)

¹ The name Λουκᾶς, Lucas (contracted from Lucanus) points to a Gentile origin. (It must not be confounded with Λούκιος. Acts xiii. 1; Romans xvi. 21, one of St. Paul's three kinsmen.) St. Paul's words in one of the Epistles of the Captivity prove that Luke was a Gentile. “Aristarchus, Marcus, Jesus which is called Justus, who are from the circumcision.” (οἱ ὄντες ἐκ περιτομῆς =

¹ This appears (though of course not exclusively) from the narrative of St. Paul's journey in the Acts. In that book every reader is struck with the first person plural (we) so often repeated. (First in Acts xvi. 10. Cf. the repeated third persons plural, down to κατέβησαν εἰς Τρῳάδα, with the abrupt and decisive εὐθέως ἐξητήσαμεν, προσκέκληται ἡμεῖς, εὐθυδρομήσαμεν. Acts xvi. 7, 8, with ibid. vv. 10, 11.) Of course it has been suspected by some critics, who, in the name of plain common-sense, weave theories of superhuman subtilty; and it is, therefore, equally of course, now a fact acquired by science (according to the same critics) that this and other passages presenting the same peculiarity are fragments of a narrative of some other companion of the Apostle, intercalated by St. Luke—and that they, therefore, contain no proof that the evangelist ever made these voyages in person. Ours is certainly the natural view. There is no proof, however, that St. Luke was converted by St. Paul, who never calls him "his son."

² Colossians iv. 14; Philemon 24. It is interesting to observe that the two evangelists, Mark and Luke, are mentioned in the context of both passages (Colossians iv. 14, cf. v. 10; Philemon 24: "Marcus, Aristarchus, Demas, Lucas," on which St. Chrysostom quaintly remarks, "the last is made first"). See also—"only Luke is with me. Take Mark, and bring him hither with thee." 2 Timothy iv. 11.

³ Λουκάς ὁ ἰατρός. Colossians iv. 14; κράτιστε Θεόφιλε. St. Luke i. 3; cf. Acts i. 1.

⁴ Romans iii. 2.

great exception of the author of the third Gospel and of the Acts of the Apostles) they were perhaps all delivered.

Other circumstances emerge from the darkness with a very high degree of probability. The narrative in the Acts of the Apostles exactly agrees in tone with the ancient tradition that St. Luke belonged originally to Antioch. The author of that work evidently enjoyed peculiar sources of information about the city; and we can feel the glow of a patriotic townsman in the subdued triumph of the tone in which he writes—"the disciples were called Christians first at Antioch."¹ That St. Paul's apostolic authority, and consummate mastery in the magnificent universalism of the Faith, presided over the formation of the third Gospel, and guided its estimate and Leading Ideas of the life and work of Jesus, is not only attested by ancient authority, but is in entire accordance with the language of both writers and with their conceptions of Christ and of Christianity.²

¹ Acts xi. 26. See the whole passage from v. 22 to the close of the chapter. A reading of Acts xi. 28 is found in Codex D.—ἦν δὲ πολλή ἀγαλλίασις· συνεστραμμένων δὲ ἡμῶν ἀναστὰς εἰς, κ. τ. λ. (συστρέφειν = to gather together, is in Acts x. 41; xxvii. 13). This reading is adopted by St. Augustine. (De Sermon. Dom. ii. 57.) The widely accepted statement that St. Luke was of Antioch (first found, probably, in Euseb. H. E. iii. 4), Ewald supposes to have arisen from this reading of Acts xi. 28. (Ewald. Apostelgeschichte, 32 sqq.; 250 sqq.)

² It seems singular that the mention of St. Luke by St. Paul in

What are we to think of the long-received supposition that St. Luke was a personal disciple of Jesus?

That he was so from the beginning of our Lord's Ministry is absolutely contradicted, not only by other circumstances just mentioned, but by the evangelist's own language in the forefront of his Gospel. He distinguishes himself modestly and precisely from those "which from the beginning were eye-witnesses."¹

Yet unquestionably from early times there was a widespread tradition that St. Luke was a personal follower of Jesus—indeed one of the seventy disciples; and this is indicated by the Gospel appointed for St. Luke the Evangelist's Day.²

What if the writer of the third Gospel was in a limited degree "an eye-witness,"³ but not "from the beginning,"⁴—i. e. in a certain sense a disciple of Jesus, though not one of the original disciples?

There is one passage which seems to give considerable support to this view. It is the narrative

2 Timothy iv. 11—evidently for a somewhat prolonged sojourn (σπούδασον πρὸ χειμῶνος ἐλθεῖν. ibid. v. 21)—has been so little associated with "the books and especially the parchments." (τὰ βιβλία, μάλιστα τὰς μεμβράνας. ibid. v. 13.) The passages really seem to point to some sort of literary collaboration between Luke or Mark and the Apostle. But the character of the third Gospel, and the witness of antiquity, prove that if such collaboration existed it was between Luke (not Mark) and Paul.

¹ St. Luke i. 2, 3.

² St. Luke x. 1 sqq.

³ αὐτόπται. St. Luke i. 2.

⁴ ἀπ' ἀρχῆς αὐτόπται. ibid.

of the appearance of the Risen Lord to the two disciples on the road to Emmaus.¹ The whole section is touched with St. Luke's softest and tenderest pencil. It is characterized throughout by an indescribable sweetness, fulness, familiarity, majesty.² How is it possible that it could have been written by any but by an eye-witness? The whole company of simple men who at that time followed Jesus could not have supplied an

¹ St. Luke xxiv. 13-36.

² "The lines on the two disciples going to Emmaus in 'Conversation,' though little more than a paraphrase of the Gospel narrative, convey pleasantly the evangelical idea of the Divine Friend. Cowper says in one of his letters that he had been intimate with a man of fine taste, who had confessed to him that though he could not subscribe to the truth of Christianity itself, he could never read this passage of St. Luke without being deeply affected by it, and feeling that if the stamp of divinity was impressed upon anything in the Scriptures, it was upon that passage."—Cowper, by Goldwin Smith, in Macmillan's Men of Letters, p. 54.

"It was almost exclusively owing to his mother that Schiller's religious feeling, his tender sense of all that was good and beautiful, his love of mankind, tolerance and capacity of self-sacrifice, in the circle of his sisters and playmates, distinguished the boy.

"On Sunday afternoon when she went to walk with both the children, she was wont to explain to them the Church gospel for the day. 'Once,' so stands it in Christophin's Memorials, 'when we two, as children, had set out walking with dear mamma to see our grandparent, she took the way from Ludwigsburg to Marbach, which leads straight over the hill. It was a beautiful Easter Monday, and our mother related to us the history of the two disciples to whom, on their journey to Emmaus, Jesus had joined himself. Her speech and narrative grew ever more inspired: and when we got upon the hill we were all so much affected that we knelt down and prayed. This hill became a Tabor to us.'"—Carlyle's Life of Schiller, p. 226.

author who would have been at home with the conception of a risen God. If Galilee had had at that time some mute inglorious Shakespeare, even his genius would have been unable to move with freedom in these altitudes of the imagination. Who but a disciple, and a disciple who was present, could have known so much, not only about Jesus but about the two—how they felt as well as how they walked and talked? It may, of course, be suggested that St. Luke here (as, no doubt, upon other occasions) used documents which were supplied to him for his work—and the suggestion cannot be considered as in itself unreasonable. But there are two points which deserve consideration. (1) There is something remarkable in the evangelist's mention of the name of one of the disciples—"the one of them, whose name was Cleopas." Why is the other not directly named? It is quite of a piece with the lofty and tender reserve of St. John, who so often speaks of himself allusively.¹ (2) One of the two disciples on the road to Emmaus has a Greek name.² This lends

¹ St. John xiii. 22; xviii. 15; xix. 27; xx. 2, 3, 4, 8; xxi. 7-20. It would appear as if this were a principle common to all the evangelists. Contrast St. Matthew's studiously reserved account of his call (St. Matthew ix. 9-14) with St. Mark ii. 15 sqq.; St. Luke v. 29 sqq. St. Mark seems to indicate himself in St. Mark xv. 53 (an incident psychologically quite on the same line with the trait of St. Mark's character in Acts xv. 37).

² Κλεόπας is contracted from Κλεόπατρος. The Cleopas in St. Luke's Gospel is erroneously identified in the margin A.V. with the some additional probability to his companion being of the same origin.¹

II

What, then, to a man like St. Luke would be the great Leading Idea of a narrative of the Life of Jesus—suggested by the circumstances of his own life? Surely it would be the following.

Christ rose in the midst of a people the “most strikingly individualized” amongst the nations of the earth—a people narrow in their conception of humanity, and intensely bigoted in the ritual of their creed. Yet (except in unessential particulars) little about Him spoke of one race or of one time. This man of an individualized race presents the type and model of a universalized humanity.

It is not very easy for us to place ourselves adequately in the position to estimate this. It has become a facile affectation to talk of the brotherhood of Man. Our large opportunities of travel-“Cleophas” of St. John xix. 25. The latter should be given as Clopas, which is one transliteration of the Aramaic name כְּלֹפָא, of which Ἀλφαῖος is another. See Mill. Mythical Interpretation of the Gospels, 228; 229. Bretschn. Man. N.T. sub v.

¹ We may associate the presence of these disciples with the Ἕλληνες τινες (St. John xii. 20). It may be added that those who take pleasure in the thought of connecting St. Luke in some way with the authorship of the Epistle to the Hebrews—a connection of which there are numerous indications—will love to trace its marvellous hermeneutics to the great Interpreter. (διερμήνευσεν αὐτοῖς ἐν π. τ. γραφαῖς τὰ περὶ αὐτοῦ. St. Luke xxiv. 27.)

ling, and the tendency of modern education, which make it (as Arnold said) only "less disgraceful to be ignorant of foreign literature than of our own," contribute powerfully to this. Only those who are already old can now remember the days when steamboats were few and small, and, except in England, railways did not exist. When the boyish traveller crossed the narrow sea to Calais, even a Frenchman seemed to him a being of almost a different nature. He would, perhaps, have been a little perplexed to be told that the Frenchman was a fellow-man and a fellow-Christian.

But, in the case of our Lord, there was a man apparently of low position and of narrow training. He had never travelled in foreign lands, or been rocked upon the great sea. He was of Jewish blood and antecedents, possibly with certain outward Jewish characteristics; certainly of Jewish training and surroundings.¹ Yet He loves, pities, honours, man as man. He can, indeed, feel indignation, generally an indignation interfused with grief. Of contempt He scarcely seems capable; unless we are to except those few occasions when men appeared to have allowed their God-given endowments to sink to the level of the mere animal creation—of dog or swine, of viper or fox.² He is pitiful and pure—pitiful in proportion to His purity. And hence that ear, so exquisitely sensitive to the discords of sin, is the first that ever heard the one faint pulse which yet kept time and tune in the harlot's passionate heart. At times He looks right over all seas and distances. He knows that His voice is of infinite volume, and that He can throw it where He will. He speaks with divine, impartial pity to all sinners and sorrowers. And in the days when He is to be absent, the message of a universal love and pity is to be carried into all lands at all costs—"both in Jerusalem, and in all Judæa and Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth."¹

¹ Certain traits of accent or of appearance may have led to the question of the woman of Samaria—"how is it that thou, being a Jew?" (St. John iv. 9.)

² St. Matthew vii. 6; xii. 34. St. Luke xiii. 32.

This view of the character and work of Jesus was naturally attractive to a man of St. Luke's antecedents. His Leading Idea of our Lord was naturally that of the universal Saviour. From memoirs in the possession of original eye-witnesses, their friends and families; from living traditions of living men and women; from the teaching and personal influence of St. Paul; as we think in the highest degree probable, partly from his own personal recollection, the third evangelist, under the guidance of the Spirit of Christ, described the Lord Jesus as such a man would love to contemplate the Head of our common humanity. In His cradle, in His miracles, in His words, in His sufferings, in His cross, in His glory, He was the light of the world, the light of the Gentiles. That which He said of a fallen son of Abraham is equally true of a fallen race. "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." The Gospel according to St. Luke is in its Leading Idea the Gospel of fallen humanity.

¹ Acts i. 8.

St. Luke was not only "capable of forming such an idea"—he was actually possessed by it. He knew of Athens, its agora, its great sects of philosophers, its peculiar institutions.¹ He reports St. Paul's lofty ethnological teaching upon the unity of the human race. He understands from his master the influence of climate and geographical position upon the destinies of race. The crises of national development, and the boundaries shaped out by the course of events, supply him with the keys to human history.² He was fitted by all the conditions of his position and modes of thought to perceive that the mission of Jesus was a universal call, with two necessary correlatives—universally impending judgment, and the universally intelligible witness of a Divine Being manifested in a human life and death.³

¹ Acts xvii. 26.

² ὁρίσας προτεταγμένους καιροὺς καὶ τὰς ὁροθεσίας τῆς κατοικίας αὐτῶν. Acts xvii. 26.

³ ὁ Θεὸς τὰ νῦν παραγγέλλει τοῖς ἀνθρώποις πᾶσιν, πανταχοῦ μετανοεῖν... ἔστησεν ἡμέραν ἐν ἣ ἔλλει κρίνειν τὴν οἰκουμένην—πίστιν παρασχὼν πᾶσιν, ἀναστήσας αὐτὸν ἐκ νεκρῶν. Acts xvii. 30, 31.

This Gentile evangelist, possibly writing his Gospel from Rome, the capital of the Gentile world, and impressed with the rejection of the Jews, brings before us the Gospel as the Gospel of humanity, the Saviour as the Saviour of the world. "It forms," says Schenkel, "the Gentile-Christian antithesis to the Jewish Christian thesis in the evangelical history, and it aims at giving Christianity an universal significance." "According to the preface, it is a composition intended to confirm the faith of a distinguished Gentile catechumen in evangelical truth." Born in a stable, under the Roman Emperor, He who was conceived by the Holy Ghost and born of the Virgin Mary is the Saviour of all men. His genealogy is brought up to Adam, the head of our humanity, not to Abraham, the progenitor of the Jewish people.¹ While St. Matthew speaks chiefly of the Twelve as representatives of the twelve tribes, St. Luke lays more stress upon the sending of the Seventy, that number being the symbol of the nations under the theocracy.² The great episode of the so-called "Journey Report"³ mentions a journey through Samaria to Judæa and Jerusalem. We may note in it tenderness to the Samaritans, in refusing to bring down fire from heaven,⁴ and in choosing the Samaritan as the embodiment of charity in that

¹ St. Luke iii. 38.

² Cf. St. Luke ix. 1, 6; x. 1, 20.

³ Ibid. ix. 51; xviii. 30.

⁴ Ibid. ix. 51, 56.

story¹ whose beauty has never been exceeded but by another, "of which Jesus is not the narrator but the subject." We may also observe that breathing of deathless hope over Tyre and Sidon—"if the mighty works had been done in Tyre and Sidon, which have been done in you, they had a great while ago repented."² And, above all, the parables of the Lost Sheep and the Prodigal Son, which touch upon the exile and the return of God's self-banished children with such tender and tearful love.³

As a natural consequence of this, one of the

¹ St. Luke x. 30, 37.

² Ibid. ver. 13.

³ It is interesting to trace some of the apparently minute modifications in the language of a Gospel to its source in a Leading Idea. (1) In the parable from nature of the nearing summer, the two other synoptics have—"learn a parable of the fig-tree"—(St. Matthew xxvi. 36; St. Mark xiii. 28). But St. Luke from other sources of information adds, "the fig-tree and all the trees." (St. Luke xxi. 29.) There was some influence which warned him that the addition might be needed for readers in other regions who do not know what the nature of the fig-tree is. (2) In St. Matthew we read of ἡ βασιλεία τῶν οὐρανῶν about thirty-two times; in St. Luke this never occurs, but ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ thirty-three times. We may conjecture that there was some fear of encouraging a material and local view. Yet οὐρανός itself is a very favourite word of St. Luke's. The question became one of transcendent importance for the Jesuit missionaries in China in the last century. (3) It has from an early period been remarked that there is an instructive reason which holds back St. Luke (the evangelist of the Gentiles) from employing in the narrative of the Transfiguration the word which might suggest the metamorphoses of heathen deities. (Cf. μεταμορφώθη, St. Matthew xvii. 2; St. Mark ix. 2, with ἐγένετο τὸ εἶδος τοῦ προσώπου αὐτοῦ ἕτερον, κ.τ.λ. St. Luke ix. 29.)

great Leading Ideas of St. Luke's Gospel is also the Leading Idea of St. Paul ; which, therefore, he did not develop from any other source than the life and words of Christ. That Leading Idea is forgiveness, grace—"not grace from works, but works from grace."

This is throughout a fundamental conception of St. Luke in those parts which are peculiar to him. All is Christ's gift. So is it with the lower blessing of healing. "On many that were blind He bestowed sight."¹ So much more is it with the higher gift of pardon and peace. Does not this apply to the story of the sinful woman who anointed the feet of Jesus ; to the parables of the love of God the Son in seeking the lost, and of God the Father in going to meet the prodigal, when he is yet a great way off ?² Consider, again, the parable of the Pharisee and Publican,³ probably not recorded by St. Matthew, because he might be supposed to be the Publican from whom it was drawn. In an age which must have outrageous excitement, people run after the converted prize-fighter, or to hear the life, babbled out in a sermon, of some poor sinner with the rouge scarcely washed from her faded face. So was it not with St. Augustine in his Confessions, where the mother of his lost Adeodatus passes into the silence, veiled and tearful, a shadow without a name. So was it not with Apostles. The same thought appears in section after section. We shall at once remember Zaccheus, to whose home salvation comes, for the Son of Man came to seek and to save that which was lost; the look that recalled Peter to himself; the word from the cross, preserved by St. Luke alone—"Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do;" that other word to the dying thief, who believed that in the pierced hands lay the keys of death and hell—"to-day shalt thou be with Me in Paradise;" the commission that "repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem."¹

¹ So the R.V. well translates ἐχαρίσατο βλέπειν. St. Luke vii. 21.

² St. Luke vii. 36 sqq. ; xv.

³ Ibid. xviii. 10 sqq.

This Gospel, whose key-note and leading idea is forgiveness; which has, as its own peculiar treasures, the forgiveness of the fallen woman, of the publican, of the crucifiers, of the dying thief, of a world if that world will receive it; comes well from the Gentile evangelist, the friend of St. Paul the great doctor of grace, who wrote his Gospel under St. Paul's guidance² and encouragement. There are

¹ St. Luke xix. 9, 10; xxii. 61; xxiii. 34, 43; xxiv. 47.

² Let us here draw attention to some important traces of Pauline thought and language in the third Gospel.

(a) One of the most interesting passages in the New Testament is the account of the institution of the Holy Communion, in the 11th chapter of 1st Corinthians. It contains the earliest record of the Eucharist, the earliest written words of our Lord. We find a two great sub-sections of this Leading Idea of the Gentile Gospel which remain to be indicated.

(a) The rejection of the Jews and the fall of Jerusalem form the antithesis to this call of the Gentiles. Yet, abused as it may have been by fanaticism, the hope of the restoration of Israel is in accordance with Scripture. Jerusalem is dear to every man of the race of Israel. The celebrated writer who is accused by his enemies of metaphysical glitter, of exaggerated tinsel and affected antithesis, becomes serious when he speaks of her. His de-remarkable coincidence with this in St. Luke's narrative, more especially in one point. St. Matthew and St. Mark say of the bread, εὐλογήσας; of the cup, εὐχαριστήσας. St. Luke alone says of the bread, εὐχαριστήσας, and in this he coincides with St. Paul.¹

(b) Few words are more familiar to all students than χάρις and πίστις. Χάρις occurs about 146 times in the New Testament, only on 21 occasions outside St. Paul's and St. Luke's writings; πίστις is found in some 243 places, about 53 times outside St. Paul and St. Luke.

(c) All readers of St. Paul's Epistles must have been arrested by the contrast drawn in Romans v. and 1 Corinthians xv. between the first man, who is from the earth, of dust, and the Second Man, whose origin is from heaven.* Is not the germ of this great thought in the last clause of the genealogy in St. Luke—"which was the son of Adam, which was the son of God"? (St. Luke iii. 38).

¹ St. Matthew xxvi. 26, 27, λαβὼν τὸν ἄρτον, καὶ εὐλογήσας... λαβὼν ποτήριον καὶ εὐχαριστήσας. So St. Mark xiv. 22, 23. But in St. Luke xxii. 19, 20, λαβὼν ἄρτον εὐχαριστήσας κ.τ.λ. Cf. 1 Corinthians xi. 24, εὐχαριστήσας ἔκλασεν.

* ἐκ γῆς χοϊκός (cf. χοὺν ἀπὸ τῆς γῆς, Genesis ii. 7), ὁ δεύτερος ἄνθρωπος ἐξ οὐρανοῦ. See Tischendorf and Reiche, Comm. Crit. 1 Corinthians xv. 47.

scription of Jerusalem is drawn with the pencil of a genuine enthusiasm. We feel that the anticipation of prophecy elevates his style when he rejoices in the fact that the terraced gardens are again ascending the hills of Jerusalem ; that " the true children of the land, the vine and the olive," are again exulting in their native soil.¹ The thought of Israel's restoration is in the words, preserved by St. Luke—" they shall be led away captive into all nations ; and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." ²

St. Paul's magnificent prophecy is but the expansion of these divine words.³

(b) A second subsection of this great chapter of St. Luke's Leading Idea of his Gospel as the Gentile Gospel is the prominence assigned to prayer in it. In the classics, the Greek and Roman writers are seldom quite serious in their treatment of prayer. The " psalmist of Eleusis " ⁴ gives an account of the origin of its mysteries in lines intended to be used in devotion, which are splendid with the colouring of Homer, but can never have expressed a sigh or accompanied a tear. For anything like a real liturgy we must pass from Greece and Rome to Egypt. But the Jews had an unapproachable

¹ Lord Beaconsfield's Tancred.

² St. Luke xxi. 24.

³ Romans xi. 11-29 (especially v. 25).

⁴ Mr. Grote's expression for the author of the hymn εἰς Δημήτραν.

prayer-book in the Psalter, with its sweet yet awful conception of the intercourse of the spirit of man with the Spirit of God.¹

An enforcement of the example and of the duty of prayer would, consequently, be within the scope of this Leading Idea of the Gentile Evangelist.² Of the praying Christ Himself in St. Luke, we shall have to speak in another place. Twice the Saviour, in St. Luke, specially urges His followers to prayer. Three parables—one among the simplest and homeliest of all ; ³ another summing up the whole widowed life of the Church in her life of prayer ; ⁴ a third more nearly than any other approaching to the caustic sarcasm of a divine irony ⁵—are found in this Gospel alone.

¹ See especially Ps. xxvii. 8, xxxii. 5, xxxiv. 6. The popular Greek notion of prayer in the third century before Christ presents a strange contrast as drawn from the life in the newly found Mimes of Herondas. IV. pp. 14-18 (espec. lines 79-95). Rutherford's Edit.

² St. Luke xviii. 1 ; xxi. 36.

³ The parable of the friend who goes to borrow three loaves, St. Luke xi. 5-14. Additional emphasis is lent to the parable by the place in which it occurs, just after the close of the Saviour's solemn prayer, and by His giving the Lord's Prayer in answer to the request, "Lord, teach us to pray." (St. Luke xi. 11.)

⁴ St. Luke xviii. 1-9.

⁵ St. Luke xviii. 9-15, ὁ Φαρισαῖος σταθεὶς πρὸς ἑαυτὸν τὰτα προσήχετο (v. 11). We are not to connect πρὸς ἑαυτὸν with σταθεὶς (which, as Meyer shows, would have required καθ' ἑαυτόν), but with προσήχετο = "he prayed these things with" (almost to, or at least towards) "himself." "Prayed these things," but what things? Not one word, one sigh, one thought of prayer. It was glorification addressed to self, not prayer addressed to God. The two parables

III

We may draw two lessons from this part of our subject.

I. The first is that St. Luke's Leading Idea of Christ as the Saviour of universal humanity is the very life of the hope without which missionary work must die out of the world.

The unvarnished history told by some honest traveller has often more power to awaken us to a sense of our duty towards the heathen than missionary sermons—nay, than the appeals of missionaries themselves.

The hatred, cruelty, drunkenness, lust, prevalent in some tribes; the very food with its stench of death; the boat-loads of stupefied wretches carried down the Congo to be eaten, shame us into thought. Human nature seems to be outraged in its majesty, and cries—"do something to raise these abject creatures."

What that something is to be we learn supremely from the third Gospel. The needle of the human heart trembles towards the ideal made real in Jesus. This gives manhood to man, and makes the woman feel that she is a woman. Conscience and pity awaken to the simple presentation of the likeness of the Son of Man. As His work is brought home the soul springs forward and hails the light of duty, as the bird upon the hill-side, when the sunshine begins to scatter the frost-mist, claps his wing, and salutes the light with a cry of gladness. The splendid motto of successful missionary work is in St. Luke's verse, quivering and radiant with the sunshine of the victory of heaven. "There was great joy in that city."¹ The universal Saviour of St. Luke's Leading Idea is fitted for every human heart.

(xviii. 1-15) are an instance of the balance by contrast in which St. Luke so much delights in every part of his work; xviii. i. 9, how to pray; xviii. 9-15, how not to pray.

2. For the same reason the Jesus of St. Luke's delineation is fitted to raise up and renovate those who are called "failures" among ourselves.

Many people know some young soul once bright and elastic, who went down in the morning singing to the battle of life, as if destined to become a leader in the army. In the noontide he stands before them cowed and helpless. He is now like a broken blade in the battle, or a shivered lamp in the sanctuary. "I seemed so strong and likely," he tells you. "But you see what I am." Then with a tear or with a sneer—or with both simultaneously—"I am one of 'Bishop Butler's favourites';² I am a Failure!"

From time to time the Jesus of whom St. Luke tells us manifests Himself to such as these. This

¹ Acts viii. 8.

² Bishop Butler, Analogy. Part I., chap. ii. ad fin.

Jesus of every man, and therefore of each man, seeks before He saves, seeks first and saves afterwards—this tender Jesus, with the tears of the sinful woman raining down upon His feet; this pathetic Jesus¹ Who suffered on earth, and suffers along the ages, Whose pity is so wonderful and so creative. Is it not actually a Leading Idea of St. Luke's Gospel that there need necessarily be no final failures—for out of the failures of earth are wrought the successes of heaven? "The Son of Man came to seek and save that which is lost."

¹ εἰ παθητὸς ὁ Χριστός. Acts xxvi. 23 (passibilis).

IV

THE LEADING IDEAS OF ST. LUKE'S GOSPEL

B

FROM HIS SPECIAL TRAINING

“Luke, the beloved physician.”—COLOSSIANS iv. 14.

ST. LUKE was a physician. It was from the first subtly remarked that his professional bias might be inferred from the whole tone in which he speaks of medical practitioners as contrasted with St. Mark. In the case of the woman with the issue of blood the third evangelist records, indeed, the failure of all treatment. But he also hints that she belonged to the class of patients who, if poor, necessarily incur a ruinous expenditure, while they are fatally bound to disappointment from the want of the necessary conditions for successful treatment. St. Mark's language is fuller, and not without a touch of something of almost melancholy bitterness —a suppressed pathos almost passing into censure. He tells with a sigh which we can all but hear the concentrated experience of the sick of all ages—not only the expense of treatment and the failure to cure, but the hopeless and heart-breaking diversity of opinion, the cruel suffering, the actual injury done by tentative remedies.¹ The passage in the third Gospel (even in its unaltered form) is evidently consistent, that in the second Gospel as evidently inconsistent with a physician's instinctive estimate of his own profession.

I

We proceed to inquire what bearing St. Luke's special training has upon the Leading Ideas of his Gospel.

1. It has a direct bearing upon them. Not less than five special miracles of healing are peculiar to

¹ ἥτις ἰατροῖς προσαναλώσασα ὅλον τὸν βίον αὐτῆς οὐκ ἴσχυσεν ὑπ' οὐδενὸς θεραπευθῆναι. St. Luke viii. 43; the οὐκ ἴσχυσεν is surely much more emphatic than "could not be healed" of our two versions. It indicates the lack of vital energy in the patient. (The words from ἰατροῖς to αὐτῆς, both included, are omitted by two uncials A.D. With this reading the thought would simply be that "the woman was one of the class of patients whose case, from its intrinsic conditions, did not admit of successful treatment.") Contrast St. Mark's language—πολλὰ παθοῦσα ὑπὸ πολλῶν ἰατρῶν καὶ δαπανήσασα τὰ παρ' αὐτῆς πάντα καὶ μηδὲν ὠφεληθεῖσα ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον εἰς τὸ χεῖρον ἐλθοῦσα. St. Mark v. 26.

St. Luke.¹ The last of these is worthy of special notice. The latest miracle of healing in the long series of the Good Physician's acts of benevolence is surely suitable to the physician's Gospel.²

St. Luke, as a physician, belonged to the "lettered class" of the Roman Empire. In Imperial Rome there was a higher college of medical studies, with examinations and exercises for degrees in which success was by no means assured to the candidate. No doubt the physician was not necessarily a gentleman of his day by birth at least. An intelligent slave sometimes won his emancipation and became a freedman for the purpose of pursuing his medical studies.³

¹ (1) The raising of the widow of Nain's son—St. Luke vii. 11–17. (2) The restoration of the woman which had a spirit of infirmity eighteen years—xiii. 10–17. (3) The cure of the man with the dropsy, xiv. 1–6. (4) The cleansing of the ten lepers—xviii. 10–20. (5) The healing of the High Priest's servant, whose ear was cut off—xxii. 50, 51. Ewald (Hist. of Israel, vi. 221, 222, English translation) contains some interesting remarks upon the whole subject of our Lord's miraculous cures.

² St. Luke xxii. 50, 51.

³ It has been observed that contracted names (like Lucas from Lucanus) were common among slaves. In an example of discussion of fact, after the plaintiff's contention, Figulus argues—"servisse eum Pisauri dominis duobus, medicinam factitasse; manumissum alienæ se familiæ immiscuisse, ac rogantem eis serviret, emptum." (M. F. QUINTIL. Instit. Orat., vii., ii. 26. Tom. iii. 63, edit. Spalding.) The commentator's assertion in a subsequent volume that "medicus" means surgeon exclusively, is refuted by many passages in Quintilian, where the "medicus" gives prescriptions and draughts, especially by a poisoning case. (Ibid. vii. ii. 17.) It has been remarked that there was a considerable medical school at

Thus one Leading Idea of the third Gospel is the reality of the healings effected by Jesus, their objective character as facts which actually occurred within the confines of history. This reality is attested to us by their capacity for being recorded in the terms of the medical science of the day.

There is another point which may most suitably be mentioned here. There are, probably, not very many persons imbued with the modern spirit, for whom the chief difficulty in the Gospels is not the recognition of demoniacal possession by the evangelists, and (if they have not misapprehended His teaching) by our Lord Himself. It seems to be very widely assumed that not only lunacy and suicidal mania, but convulsive and epileptiform seizures are confounded with possession. It is therefore important to notice that the distinction between these two classes of affections is quite clearly indicated by St. Luke.¹ In this respect, the Gospel of the physician gives us important help.²

2. To the training of St. Luke's professional life developing natural aptitude we may trace, in some Colossæ. St. Paul's special mention of St. Luke as a physician with deep personal affection may not have been without reference to this fact. Christianity from the very first, for reasons deeply connected with its whole dogmatic and ethical teaching, brought the medical profession into prominence, and the Apostle desires to make it honourable. (See Bishop Wordsworth, N.T. vol. ii. 331.)

¹ ἰαθῆναι ἀπὸ τῶν νόσων—ἐνοχλούμενοι ἀπὸ πνευμάτων. St. Luke vi. 17, 18.

² See Note B at the end of this Discussion.

measure a second and very important Leading Idea of the third Gospel.

Early in that Gospel, we read of the devout Simeon saying, with the Holy Spirit upon him, to the Blessed Mother, that her wondrous "Child was set for the fall and rising up of many in Israel; and for a sign ever being spoken against; that thoughts out of many hearts may be revealed."¹ The revelation of human character by Christ, Christ as the touchstone of the human soul, is a second great Leading Idea of St. Luke's Gospel—and might almost stand as its summary from one point of view—and this characteristic is more closely connected with St. Luke's special training than might at first appear.

The physician is, perforce, something of a psychologist, and the physician of considerable practice has opportunities of exercising himself in the study of human nature probably accorded to no other man. Psychologizing may have peculiar dangers for natures of an introspective tendency. The psychological scoundrel occasionally admires himself as an interesting phenomenon; it is something to be a singular scoundrel. Much more frequently the student of self congratulates himself upon the acuteness of some piece of self-discovery, when he should be amending a weakness or sighing over a sin. But the physician has an ample field in his observation of others. He comes to make a diagnosis of our malady; he goes away perhaps, with a more thorough diagnosis of our character. If we were called upon to take part in a process of canonization, we might find a more satisfactory witness in the doctor than in the confessor to the true spirituality of a man's soul. He knows in his minute and lengthened observations whether the sick man possesses patience, resignation, faith. The physician may not be a religious man. He may be a speculative unbeliever. Yet his ear is quick and his eye sharp. He knows whether the feet of Jesus have stood by the bedside, whether His voice has whispered low and sweet over the darkening waves—"it is I: be not afraid." Thus in St. Luke's Gospel we have delineations of human character as revealed by the presence of Christ. The Gospel of the physician is also the Gospel of the psychologist.¹

¹ ὅπως ἂν ἀποκαλυφθῶσιν ἐκ πολλῶν καρδιῶν διαλογισμοί. St. Luke ii. 35. διαλογίζεσθαι, διαλογισμός, are truly Lucan words (see Bruder Concordant, s.v.). Thoughts too vague for present utterance are ripened, and man is revealed to himself, by Christ.

¹ The same divine underlying principle is often so to speak translated into the languages of different tracts of thought by different Leading Ideas in two or more evangelists. There were deep and divine reasons why the Risen Saviour was not to run the risk of being seen by any miscellaneous crowd. St. Mark tells us this of the walk to Emmaus in his way—"He was manifested ἐν ἑτέρᾳ μορφῇ." (St. Mark xvi. 12.) But St. Luke gives us the internal and psychological reason—"their eyes were holden"—and the cause of this (ὡ ἀνόητοι καὶ βραδεῖς τῇ καρδίᾳ τοῦ πιστεῦν κ.τ.λ.). (St. Luke xxiv. 16-25.) Note also the preservation by our evangelist alone of the profoundly significant καθ' ἡμέραν, so important in the formation of character. (ix. 23.)

(a) We need but remind ourselves of such single characters as Herod and Pilate;¹ as the covetous man who wishes to make Christ an arbitrator: as Zaccheus.²

But St. Luke specially aimed at groups, or at least, pairs of contrasted characters³—at showing us how the thoughts of their hearts are revealed as if by an electric light at some crisis-moment suddenly thrown by the Master of their being upon each twig and fibre of the tree of the inner life. Like the other evangelists, indeed, he seldom ventures to tell in so many words the principles which lay at the root of our Lord's treatment of each case. We are left to discover that for ourselves. And the very diversity of the treatment is a key to our understanding of the character. A remarkable instance is found in the three types of different natures and conditions of men thrown together by St. Luke alone.⁴ The two first, indeed, are known to us from St. Matthew.⁵ But the ¹ St. Luke xxiii. 9, cf. ix. 9. (The writer ventures to refer to a sermon upon the character of Herod Antipas, in The Great Question, 2nd edit., Kegan Paul and Trench, pp. 171-187.) For the remarkable indication of Peter's character in St. Luke v. 8, see Pastor Pastorum, pp. 201, 202.

² St. Luke xii. 13, 14; xix. 1-10.

³ The most wonderful of these is Barabbas and Jesus; what is said of the first, and left unsaid of the second, with the tremendous voluntariness of the Jews in their persistent choice. ὅν ᾗτοῦντο—τῷ θελήματι αὐτῶν (St. Luke xxiii. 25).

⁴ St. Luke ix. 57-62.

⁵ St. Matthew viii. 18-23. To this part of the subject perhaps belongs the sacred and subtle irony of certain parts of our Lord's teaching. We have already noticed St. Luke xviii. 11. Again St.

addition of the third makes the purpose more emphatic. The first was willing, too willing perhaps. Probably his position as scribe, student and thinker, made a wandering life too cruel a trial for him. Possibly he could render better service among his books and natural companions. At all events, Christ reins back the willing: He drives the spur into the unwilling. For the soul's life of the two last, they must nerve themselves as if to pass through an agony of death. Indeed, it would seem as if one Leading Idea of St. Luke were to correct the most popular and prevalent fallacy of our own days—the heresy of salvation by emotion, the belief that a religion of sudden transport and sonorous affirmation is the only religion that saves. The Saviour, whom St. Luke delineates, loved to awaken neither exaggerated profession nor hasty resolution. How could He—He whose resolution had an eternity behind it, and whose work, therefore, had an eternity before it? Of Him it is supremely true, that “God approves

The depth and not the transport of the soul,
A fervent not ungovernable love.”¹

Luke xi. 36, 37. St. Luke's unfailing psychological insight taught him that the lawyer would not bring himself to do such honour to the son of a despised race as to say downright, “the Samaritan.” So he preserves for us the plausible ambiguity of the respectable periphrasis “he that showed mercy on him.”

¹ Wordsworth—Laodamia.

A beautiful exception is made in favour of woman's more tender and demonstrative nature.¹ But the delineation of the Saviour by the third evangelist is markedly intended to discourage the ostentatious display of unregulated emotion, so well known to us as sentimentalism. Besides one passage already quoted,² we find in St. Luke the sentimental woman corrected by a wholesome check upon her admiration, the sentimental man warned by a stern parable,³ the sentimental multitude⁴ sifted and chastened by the fourfold "cannot"⁵ and by the three anti-sentimental parables, peculiar to our Gospel.⁶ The singular gush and fulness of St. Peter's profession, and our Lord's short sad warning, in St. Luke's narrative, may close the important topic.⁷

But before leaving the subject of St. Luke's fineness and delicacy of psychological perception, we should notice those brief but most true touches which take off, as by an instantaneous photograph, those apparently contradictory co-existences of feeling which lie at the root of life in its deeper moods. It is he who tells us how St. Peter,

¹ St. Luke vii. 44-46.

² Ibid. ix. 57.

³ Ibid. xi. 27, 28; xiv. 15-25.

⁴ "There went with Him great multitudes," Ibid. xiv. 25.

⁵ οὐ δύναται (xiv. 26); οὐ δύναται (v. 27); οὐκ ἴσχυσεν, οὐ δύναται (v. 33).

⁶ The improvident builder; the improvident warrior; the king in peril (St. Luke xiv. 28-34).

⁷ Ibid. xxii. 33, 34.

in the sweet and awful moment when Christ first reveals Himself fully to his soul as the Master of it and of nature, though he clung to that Lord with a yearning devotion before unknown, yet "fell down at Jesus' knees, saying, Depart from me; for I am a sinful man, O Lord."¹ It is St. Luke again who remembers that, when the risen Lord had showed the disciples His hands and His feet there was a space during which "they believed not for joy."² Perhaps the most important of these psychological aperçus is contained in the brief history of the Ascension. After Jesus was parted from the disciples, the third evangelist tells us that "they worshipped Him, and returned to Jerusalem with great joy."³ Now the current rationalistic account of the Ascension of our Lord is that it is an amplification of the last scene of Elijah's life, and modelled upon it. But there is one point of absolute divergence. At the parting of Elijah there are voices of anticipatory mourning; there is an exceeding bitter cry, and the rent garment of mourning.⁴ But in St. Luke's account of the Ascension of Jesus there is this touch without a parallel in the long history of human partings—"with great joy." Yes! For there remained the unfading memory of the uplifted hands, and the great hope which closes the Ascension narrative.⁵

¹ St. Luke v. 8, 9.

² Ibid. xxiv. 41.

³ Ibid. xxiv. 52.

⁴ 2 Kings ii. 3-13.

⁵ Acts i. 11.

(b) This Leading Idea of St. Luke's Gospel finds one of its richest applications in its development of the character of women in relation to Jesus. The third Gospel tells us with unrivalled delicacy and fulness what Jesus did for woman,¹ and what woman did for Jesus. It is the Gospel of womanhood become Christian, or on its way to Christ.

Let us refer to the women whose characters are touched by St. Luke's affluent pencil, and discriminated with exquisite refinement.

In the early chapters we find Elizabeth, Anna, the Blessed Virgin. The Mary of St. Luke is at once identical with the Mary of St. Matthew, and yet more full of life and colour. In St. Matthew, she is the pure and much-tried woman; put to shame, indeed, for a little in the eyes of her betrothed, but nobly justified by an angel's lips. She is "The Virgin"² of Isaiah's prophecy. We hear something of her at the visit of the Wise Men, something of her hurried flight into Egypt, and of her return into the land of Israel. But in the Apostle's delineation there is a singular reserve. Mary stands before us, the Mother-maid; splendid

¹ To the accusation against our Lord before Pilate, after διαστρέφοντα τὸ ἔθνος ἡμῶν κ.τ.λ. (St. Luke xxiii. 2), the Marcionite version of St. Luke added, καὶ ἀποστρέφοντα τὰς γυναῖκας καὶ τὰ τέκνα. (Epiphan. Adv. Hæres. xlii. 11.)

² It is significant that while we naturally say, "the Mother and Child" (with St. Luke ii. 16), St. Matthew repeatedly, and as if emphatically, writes, "the Child and Mother." (St. Matthew ii. 11-13, 14, 20, 21.)

in the light of prophecy—statuesque, silent as a picture, sad and beautiful as a dream. The Child Jesus is not so much upheld by her, as floating in light on her arms or upon her breast. But in St. Luke the picture is clothed in flesh and blood; the dream grows real. There is breath and poetry upon her lips. Her heart beats quicker at the angel's salutation. Maiden modesty and saintly resignation to burning shame fill her brief but pregnant words. The hoarded music of her soul finds measured utterance of its serene and stately joy. The Magnificat, chanted in so many churches, is the highest specimen of the subtle influence of the song of purity, so exquisitely described by a great poet. It is the Pippa Passes among the liturgies of the world. It is a woman teaching in the Church for ever without usurpation of authority, but with a saintly quietness,¹ that knows no end. The psychologist seems to sound the depths of that nature—ever watching and keeping close the several single things which are so many special utterances of God; ever comparing them with and interpreting them by, facts. He lets us see that as she kept them closely, so she kept them on through all circumstances.²

¹ 1 Timothy ii. 12.

² ἡ δὲ Μαριάμ πάντα συνετήρει τὰ ῥήματα ταῦτα συμβάλλουσα ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ αὐτῆς. (St. Luke ii. 19.) (For the force of ῥήμα see Vaughan on Epistle to Hebrews, i. 3. Westcott, Epistle to Hebrews, i. 49.) ἡ μήτηρ αὐτοῦ διετήρει πάντα τὰ ῥήματα ταῦτα κ.τ.λ. ibid.

Many other forms succeed. The widow of Nain ; the sinner who wipes the feet of Jesus with her long hair ; the women which ministered unto Him of their substance — Mary that was called Magdalene, and Joanna, the wife of Chuza, Herod's steward, and Susanna, and many others ; the impulsive woman who lifted up her voice and said unto Him, "blessed is the womb that bare Thee ;" the contrasted natures of Mary and Martha ; the weeping daughters of Jerusalem, called upon to "pay betimes

A moiety of that mass of moans to come" ;—¹

the service done by women for the burial, and after the Resurrection as apostles to the Apostles.²

It is worthy of all notice that this mission of the

v. 51. The immediate context of the first of these two passages gives an exquisite specimen of that silent contrast which has such a charm for St. Luke. In vv. 15–20 we have five such contrasts. (1) The angels, and "the men, the shepherds" (οἱ ἄνθρωποι, οἱ ποιμένες), v. 15. (2) The places to which they depart, vv. 17, 18, the angels to heaven, the men to Bethlehem (v. 15). (3) The simple pious overflow of garrulity in the shepherds ("they made known concerning the saying which was spoken to them about this child") ; the words of the hearers (v. 20). (4) The majestic silence of Mary (v. 19). (5) Yet another contrast—that silence with the simple burst of the shepherd's liturgy.

¹ Cassandra in Troilus and Cressida. Act ii., Sc. 2.

² St. Luke vii. 11–16, 37–50 ; viii. 1–4 ; x. 38–42 ; xxiii. 27–32 ; xxiii. 55 to xxiv. 12 ; xxiv. 22. The same characteristic pervades the Acts of the Apostles (see Acts xii. 13) ; Lydia, the first European convert (xvi. 14, 15) ; Rhoda (xii. 13, 14) ; and Tabitha, the leader of that noble army of good women, veiled and unveiled, who have ministered to suffering humanity for so many ages. (ix. 36–39.)

Saviour to womanhood occurs so prominently in the Gospel for the Gentiles. Among them more especially woman was degraded—sometimes the mere useful drudge of the meanest household details; sometimes the helpless tool of hideous lusts; occasionally a royal harlot or a splendid tigress. The peculiar power given to her by her very weakness was scarcely recognized. At the hand and touch of Jesus, that hidden wealth of tenderness was disclosed. From her out of whom Jesus cast seven devils to the Chinese woman converted last year, womanhood confesses—"Christ first taught us that we were women." While the New Testament tells us of some wicked women, yet the Gospels give no record of any who actually opposed Jesus Himself during His ministry. Alas! that sad distinction has been reserved for later days—for those who compose romances in the long hours of leisure which they owe to His influence, and who write sarcastic essays with the hands which He has set free.

(c) We reserve for the last place the crowning fruit of this peculiar preparation of St. Luke's mind for the work of an evangelist. It is one of his superior Leading Ideas to apply this psychological penetration to the character and work of the Son of Man. Some of the chief instances of this may be given.

(a) As has already been indicated, we find in the third Gospel the true successive developments of a true human life and nature. It is somewhat surprising, perhaps, to find the growth—corporeal and moral—of John the Baptist and of the Holy One of God, spoken of, up to a certain point, in the same language.¹ At least it witnesses that the second was as truly human as the first.

(b) The effect of prayer upon two of the sublimest external phenomena in the Saviour's life is mentioned in conformity with this purpose of St. Luke. Prayer on His part is the psychological antecedent of the scene at the Baptism, and of the glory of the Transfiguration. To St. Luke alone we owe both notices. "Jesus having been baptized, and while He was yet praying, the heaven was opened, and the Holy Ghost descended in a bodily form as a dove."² It was even in the act of His yet praying that the fashion of His countenance became other.³ There was not a magic cleaving of the heavens; a sudden and theatrical radiance steeping face, and form, and vesture. There was a human factor; a spiritual condition; a suitable antecedent, in the perfect Man. The inward glory grew outward, coalesced with the opening sky, and melted into the light of heaven. Among human faces few, indeed, look like the face of an angel, or are touched with heavenly radiance. The only true light on any face is sure to be a light of prayer.

¹ St. Luke i. 80; ii. 40. Note the πληρούμενον σοφίας in the case of the child Jesus.

² Εγένετο δὲ...καὶ Ἰησοῦ βαπτισθέντος καὶ προσευχομένου, ἀνεψχθῆναι τὸν οὐρανόν. St. Luke iii. 21.

³ Καὶ ἐγένετο ἐν τῷ προσεύχεσθαι αὐτὸν τὸ εἶδος τοῦ προσώπου αὐτοῦ ἕτερον. St. Luke ix. 29.

(c) We may call in this Leading Idea to explain to us statements, which sometimes seem incomprehensible—sometimes even degrading—as applied to one like Him, but which always “requite studious regard with opportune delight.”

Let us turn to some instances.

1. “It came to pass when the days were being fulfilled of His being received up.”¹—What can this mean, standing where it does, and speaking of a time before His death? Faith reads the riddle. “The style of the evangelist imitates the feeling of Jesus.”² Again: “His sweat was, as it were, great drops of blood falling to the ground.”³ The academic Shimeis of England, and France, and Germany, may seek for stones to fling at Him from the dust of the garden. The French man of letters may cross Kedron, and wave out his scented blasphemies, leaving the unwholesome scent of Parisian patchouli under the olives of Gethsemane. Why that Agony, those big drops, that burst of sorrow in which He was withdrawn¹ from His own? Why was He less firm than the martyrs, than Socrates, than the Stoics, than the Indian brave? The psychologist, who was also a physician, reveals fearlessly what believers have sometimes shrunk from exposing to the unbeliever's gaze.

¹ ἐν τῇ συμπληροῦσθαι τὰς ἡμέρας τῆς ἀναλήψεως αὐτοῦ. St. Luke ix. 51. “As the time drew near its accomplishment, in which He was to be raised by death into His heavenly glory.”—RIGGENBACH.

² Bengel in loc.

³ St. Luke xxii. 44.

2. In one beautiful passage, the martyred Bishop of Antioch speaks of the things which Jesus wrought by His silence; of that gentle and noiseless quietude, really to hear which is the fulness of Christian perfection.² This "passive side" of Christ's life is one of the Leading Ideas of St. Luke.

Under this comes the long retirement at Nazareth between the first journey to Jerusalem and the Baptism—emphasized by one entire section of the Gospel.³ Under this head of the silent life again must be brought the repeated reference to the seclusion and prayers of Jesus. So "as the multitudes were thronging together to hear Him and to be healed of their infirmities, He for His part was ever withdrawing in the deserts and praying.”¹ So before the call of the Apostles, it is from this evangelist we learn that “He went out into the mountain to pray, and was all night through in prayer to God.”² The Gospel is throughout a record of these silent prayers.³ Under this Leading Idea we should also range the silence of Jesus before Herod⁴—a touch added by St. Luke to the picture of the silent Lamb in the other evangelists. To an age, precipitate, loquacious, and idolatrous of the immediate beyond any other in the history of Christianity, this greatness of the silent Jesus conveys too little that is impressive. With primitive Christianity at least it was different. The words “like a lamb dumb before his shearers, so opened He not His mouth” formed a central part of the text from which Philip preached Jesus to the treasurer of Candace. “When He was reviled, He reviled not again; when He suffered, He threatened ¹ The contrast should be noted and the tenses—συνήρχοντο ὄχλοι... αὐτὸς δὲ ἦν ὑποχωρῶν καὶ προσευχόμενος. St. Luke v. 15.

¹ ἀπεσπάρθη. St. Luke xxii. 41.

² εἷς οὖν διδάσκαλος ὃς εἶπεν καὶ ἐγένετο· καὶ ἡ σιγῶν δὲ πεποίηκεν ἄξια τοῦ πατρὸς εἶσθιν. ὁ λόγον Ἰησοῦ κεκτημένος ἀληθῶς δύναται καὶ τῆς ἡσυχίας αὐτοῦ ἀκοῦειν, ἵνα τέλειος ᾖ· ἵνα δι' ὧν λαλεῖ πράσῃ καὶ δι' ὧν σιγᾷ γινώσκηται. IGNAT. Epist. ad Ephē. xv. "The silence here contemplated relates not to the counsels of God (as in sect. 19), but to the life of Christ."—BISHOP LIGHTFOOT. Apostolic Fathers, ii. 69.

³ St. Luke ii. 39-41. The twelve years' retirement in Nazareth; vv. 42-50, the visit to Jerusalem and questioning in the Temple; ii. 50 to iii. 23, the retirement of eighteen years in Nazareth.

² ἦν διανυκτερεύων ἐν τῇ προσευχῇ τοῦ Θεοῦ. St. Luke vi. 12.

³ προσευχόμενον κατὰ μόνας. St. Luke iii. 21; v. 16; vi. 12; ix. 18, 28, 29; xi. 1 (occasion of giving the Lord's Prayer); xxii. 41-44. [“Nullus tamen (exceptâ passionis historiâ) præter Johannem ipsa verba precantis Jesus descripsit.” Bengel.]

⁴ St. Luke xxiii. 9: cf. for silence before Pilate, St. Matthew xxvii. 14; St. Mark xv. 3, 4; St. John xix. 8, 9. For silence before Jewish tribunal, St. Matthew xxvi. 62, 63; St. Mark xiv. 60, 61.

not," writes St. Peter.¹ The silence and retirement of Jesus throughout is a Leading Idea of St. Luke in his Gospel. That silence at the trials which brought Him to the cross was a circumstance which impressed most deeply His earliest disciples.²

II

Two thoughts of a practical kind arise directly from this part of our subject.

1. Our particular calling in life may introduce us to work of peculiar value for the cause of Christ.

An English Royal Academician has lately told us the story of the success of his career. He began by working for a coach-builder in early life. He was set to paint the panels of carriages, and thus acquired a practical knowledge of grinding and mixing colours, which was one of the great means of his success as an artist. The peculiar purity and brilliance of his colours was a secret learned

¹ Acts viii. 33-36; 1 Peter ii. 23.

² The last miracle of healing (St. Luke xxii. 51) may, from one point of view, be referred to this heading. We may observe it in an exquisite adjustment between full consciousness of the possession of superhuman power and resolution not to employ it one hair-breadth beyond the appointed limit; to exert it for another if need arose, in no degree for Himself. Ἐὰν εἰς τοῦτον, says Jesus. Surely the meaning is that He addresses the soldiers who have Him in charge—"allow Me only so long," "just up to this," i. e. to touching the wounded man's ear. At the self-same moment He transcends humanity and yet submits to injustice. The miracle is at once divine in its plenitude and in its economy of the miraculous.

by the coach-builder's apprentice. The experience which Gibbon acquired as a Captain of the Hampshire Militia was of no little service to the historian of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire. All preparatory training may be made subservient to a higher earthly end, and through it to a heavenly work.¹ Thus the very petty annoyances and vulgarities of daily life may one day be given a glorious oblation to our Master. The very hemerods and mice may be returned in gold to God.²

2. From the tone and Leading Ideas of St. Luke's Gospel we see that to the complexity and intricacy of human characters, to the variety of human minds and temperaments, Christ presents Himself with a wonderful adaptation. The soul—the very self—is a shrine hidden in a labyrinth. Round it there are a million ways, of which only one reaches to its centre. It has a strange inner chamber, where it waits, full often in anguish. It can hear with superficial comprehension the accents of a million tongues. But only one goes completely home to it. Christ knows that shrine, and how to reach it; His feet are on the very path by which He can enter it. Christ speaks in every tongue of the earth, in every accent of those many tongues. To each one of us He can address Himself in the accent which wins our most pathetic smiles and our sweetest tears. The motto of Christ's manifestation to our hearts is the motto of the Gospel of the beloved physician—that "the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed."

¹ Whilst these lines were being written, the obituary of the Times (January 23, 1891) contained a notice of the career of one who belonged to St. Luke's profession—Edward John Waring, M.D., C.I.E. Dr. Waring published two large and well-known medical books, Manual of Practical Therapeutics and Bazaar Medicines. But his delight was in religious writings and philanthropic work, of which his "spectacled missions" was the most original and touching. His motto might have been taken from the physician St. Luke: τυφλοῖς πολλοῖς ἐχαρίσατο τὸ βλέπειν. (St. Luke vii. 21.)

² 1 Samuel vi. 17, 18.

[As the Evangelium Marcionis has been several times referred to, it may be well to add that it is quite different from the Gospels which are known as "apocryphal." It is the Gospel according to St. Luke carefully corrupted and mutilated by Marcion for dogmatic purposes. Epiphanius, Tertullian, and a pseudo-Origenist dialogue show what passages Marcion cut out, as well as those which he changed according to his own ideas. The Marcionite variants have no claim to be dignified as readings. See Evang. Apocryph. TISCHEND. Proleg. xi. n. I.]

NOTE A

IN what mode our Lord's miraculous healings took place we are not in a position to define.

That cures of a wonderful character occurred the ablest modern rationalists feel themselves absolutely unable to deny. The accepted theory of the school has been expressed by its two foremost advocates.

M. Renan writes : "Who will venture to deny that in many cases, and keeping outside definite lesions, contact with an exquisite personality may do more than all the resources of the pharmacopœia ? The very pleasure of seeing such an individual cures. It gives what it can—a light, a hope—and that is not quite in vain. Scientific medicine (founded five centuries before in Greece) was, in the days of Jesus, unknown to the Jews of Palestine. In such a condition of knowledge, the presence of a man of lofty superiority, treating the invalid with gentleness, and giving him, by some sensible sign, assurance of his recovery, is often a decisive remedy." (Vie de Jésus. RENAN. 260.) Another less widely celebrated, but, we venture to think, greatly more sincere and profound teacher of the same school, argues more spiritually and tenderly upon the same lines. Schenkel sees in Jesus as the healer of the sick an exceptionally-gifted man, carrying a natural endowment to the highest recorded point in the history of the human race. The assurance from one so gentle and so holy, penetrating in some cases to the connection of the prolonged suffering with some hidden excess, "bathed the diseased nervous system of the man as if with an electric stream, and restored to him the use of his limbs." Still this power, producing as it did an effect inexplicable by reference to any common standard, was, in point of fact, a "natural human gift."¹ But surely it is useless to play with the word "natural." The magic natural (i. e. merely unusual) influence upon the sick of certain beautifully-endowed personalities may give us some analogical conception of the line upon which our Lord's mission of healing moved.

¹ See Schenkel. Characterbild Jesu. 67-69.

Certainly the measure of healing influence was narrowed or expanded by the measure of spiritual susceptibility. (St. Matthew xiii. 58 ; St. Mark vi. 5.) But a "natural human gift" thus exalted, and become the appanage of a being with the claims put forth by Jesus, is supernatural.

If it could be absolutely proved that this theory of Schenkel supplied us with the true conception of the mode by which, and of the plane along which, the curative power of Jesus moved, we are unable to see that the evidential value of the facts in question would be impaired in the slightest degree. Law, with its detective instruments and abounding instincts of order, would have pushed over into yet another province. But it cannot push out God. To expel our ignorance is not to expel the divine Presence. It is childishness—or atheism—to hold that every mile gained by law is a mile stolen from God.

NOTE B

Recent investigations carefully pursued by the "Psychical Research Society" appear to give ground for arriving at some important conclusions upon the subject of possession. The reported phenomena of one case of trance-mediumship force us to one or other of three conclusions ; either (1) the trance-medium is an impostor (which very painstaking and prolonged observation by acute intellects does not in this case seem to prove) ; or (2) there are obscure substrata of consciousness and memory in persons present and brought into contact with the "trance-medium," which communicate their contents by some process of projection to that individual ; or (3) indestructible elements of personality cling round the central permanent individual consciousness after its severance from the body. In the case of those who are separated from the light and life of God, these indestructible elements are permitted at times to manifest themselves through association with the corporeal organization of some living individual, who yields to the suggestion of this evil personality. These occult phenomena in the nineteenth century bear a striking resemblance to those recorded in the Gospels in the following respects :—

(a) The whole personality of the individual suffers intermittent changes at uncertain intervals.

(b) A secondary personality sub-introduces itself, and uses the corporeal organization of the first ; whilst the ordinary personality is in partial suspense or suppression, quiescent, and merely physically alive. (Proceedings of Society for Psychical Research. December 1890. P. 438.) Sometimes

(c) The primary personality is invaded by more than one personality (Ibid. Pp. 493, 524.)

(d) Convulsive twitchings and epilepsy or epileptiform affections are the prelude, condition, or result of single, duplex, or multiform personality. (Ibid. Pp. 442-444.)

The Scripture narratives of possession are illustrated ; and that with a freedom and naturalness of expression which shows that the language is not a mere plagiarism from the sacred text. E.g., “ If I take possession of the medium’s body, and she goes out, I can use her organization to tell the world important truths.” (Proceedings of Society for Psychical Research. December 1890. P. 516.) “ It’s a mistake not to believe in God. Christ was a reflexion of God, and we are a reflexion of Him. He is infinitely superior to everybody. He is the real reflexion, we are secondary reflexions.” (Ibid. P. 545 ; cf. St. Matthew viii. 29 ; St. Mark i. 24, 34 ; Acts xvi. 16, 17 ; St. James ii. 19. For duplex or multiform possession, see St. Matthew xii. 45 ; St. Mark xvi. 9 ; St. Luke viii. 37, 38 ; for power of selecting an organization, St. Matthew xii. 43, 44 ; for epileptiform symptoms, St. Mark ix. 18, 23.) A large part of the utterances of the “ trance-medium ” are extremely silly. No doubt ; but a vast number of wicked people in the flesh are extremely silly also—and one does not see why the act of dying should necessarily endow them with a lofty wisdom. If the utterances are genuine, they prove that the personalities who utter them are very silly ; but they prove also that they are very restless and miserable. (Cf. St. Luke xi. 24.) It may be added that cases of possession, real or supposed, are well known among the Hindus. A respected convert of high literary eminence, the author of a long series of Christian and philological works, lately published a book in which he solemnly declared that at one period of his life "a Mohammedan spirit took possession of him;" that, under the influence, he was at first "very violent;" that "the influence" repeatedly "entered him," and on one occasion compelled him to go at night and stop under a tree in a neighbouring village. "Since his conversion he has never been troubled in this way." (Once Hindu, now Christian. The Early Life of Baba Padmanji. An Autobiography. Translated from the Marathi language. Nisbet & Co. 1890. Pp. 50, 51.)

For demons and demoniacal possession in the Old Testament, see 1 Samuel xvi. 14, 16, 23. Cf. Isaiah xlii. 21, 22; xxxiv. 14. [For עֲלֻקָּה, שְׁעִירִים, לִילִית, see Lexicons]; also in Apocrypha, Baruch iv. 35. Tobit iii. 8, 17; vi. 7, 14, 15, 17; viii. 3.

NOTE C

One of the most important divisions of true experimental psychology must always be connected with the theory of temperaments. The two chief recent classifications of temperament are those of Wundt and Lotze. From the able analysis of Lotze's classification by a recent and most competent philosopher, the writer extracts some sentences which curiously illustrate this portion of our Lord's dealings with one mould of human nature. "For the temperament usually called 'melancholic' Lotze would substitute the term sentimental. This temperament is distinguished by 'special receptivity for the feeling of the value of all possible relations,' but is indifferent toward bare matter of fact. It implies a lively appreciation of harmony and discord, great variety of æsthetical feeling and imaginative activity, often with theoretical vagueness, ready yielding of the sense of duty to inclination, and dislike of hard work." Physiological Psychology. Chapter xviii. Lotze, Classification of Temperament. P. 459. By Professor George Turnbull Ladd.)

IV

THE LEADING IDEAS OF ST. LUKE'S GOSPEL

C

FROM HIS NATURAL ENDOWMENT

“Thine eyes shall see the King in His beauty ; they shall behold the land that is very far off.”—ISAIAH xxxiii. 17.¹

MEN, as we know, come into the world with a different stock of tendencies, with different endowments. A few may say of themselves, “there was a star danced when I was born.” They are endowed with a sense of Beauty.

Of Beauty the best definition probably is a very old one. “The essence of the beautiful consists in amplitude and order.”² The sublime and the pretty are two opposite modifications. The sublime is the Beautiful, with its amplitude pushed into indefinite vastness, and the tender smile, which is its inevitable tribute, exchanged for a certain awe. The pretty is at the opposite end of the measurement. It is beauty so reduced on the scale as to want the nobility of seriousness; so petty that our admiration is not without a certain intermixture of contempt. The Beautiful, when it approaches the verge of terror at one extreme or of contempt at the other, when it begins to be feared or patronised, may soon have to be called by another name.

מֶלֶךְ בְּיָפִיז תְּחַיֶּינָה עֵינֶיךָ תִּרְאֶינָה אֶרֶץ מְרֻחָקִים :

² τὸ γὰρ καλὸν ἐν μεγέθει καὶ τάξει ἐστίν. ARIST. Poet. vii.

The soul and the actions of man are properly, and not merely by analogy, termed beautiful. There are natures so large and so conformed to moral harmony that we instinctively term them beautiful. There are actions which show so much of the beauty of the soul from which they proceed that we call them also beautiful.

This high endowment St. Luke possessed. Consequently he looks upon Christ with a gifted vision. "His eyes saw the King in His beauty."

I

From this endowment one Leading Idea of the third Gospel naturally arises—the conception that the human soul and actions of Jesus were supremely beautiful.

This is not so much a logical principle of division or an historical framework, as an atmosphere in which it lies. The memoir is full of the overpowering conviction that Christ is "fairer than the children of men;" that the record of the life of Jesus is full of joy and beauty, as well as of truth and power, so that its motto might be—"blessed are the eyes which see the things which ye see."¹

A well-known tradition makes St. Luke a painter. This tradition is not very ancient. It is not to be found in any writer before the sixth century. It is the thirteenth century before he appears as the patron saint of painters. He was not a painter. One of the most learned of living Roman Catholics writes—"all Protestants and not a few Catholics deny this."²

So the evangelist who never painted the form of the Son of Man on canvas, or laid it in rich enamel, has given us the most attractive picture of Him.³ In St. Matthew, He is Israel's Monarch; in St. Mark, He is the Son of God; in St. John, He is the Word made Flesh; in St. Luke (while the title of the Lord is sometimes met with, the Lord Jesus being most frequently found⁴) we are led to think the emblem of the Man more appropriate than that of the ox, which yet suits so well

¹ St. Luke x. 23.

² DANK. Hist. Rev. Div. ii. 285.

³ "Esto enim eum fuisse peritum medicum, esto egregium pictorem, omnium præstantissimum est evangelistam egisse." DANK. ibid.

⁴ St. Luke vii. 13; x. 1; xi. 39; xii. 42; xiii. 52; xxii. 61; xxiv. 3.

the priestly story at the beginning, and the overpowering conviction of the sacrifice at the end. For in St. Luke, He is pre-eminently the Son of Man; loving, pitying, pardoning a fallen race; anointed to heal the broken-hearted;¹ leaving the ninety and nine that He may bear the lost with all the strength and tenderness of that Divine Manhood. St. Luke may not have the lion strength of St. Mark, nor the eagle flight of St. John. The words of Christ recorded by him may be conversations rather than discourses. But the Christ in St. Luke is especially the Son of Man;—the Child, wrapped in swaddling clothes and cradled upon a human breast; growing with true human growth in the holy home; not merely letting tears rain down² as by the grave of Lazarus, but breaking into sobs of lamentation over Jerusalem,³ the kneeler in Gethsemane, supported by His creature, yet so divinely drawn, that faith adores the Lord of angels, strengthened by an angel, and the Son of God writhing like a trodden worm.⁴ Men complain of sameness in sacred art. Even the rationalist can teach us, that they “who would give it freshness must steep their minds in the New Testament.”⁵

¹ Luke iv. 16, 22. Isaiah lxi. 1, 2. How beautiful in its pathos must have been His look and voice when He Himself applied the prophetic word!

² ἑδάκρυσεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς. St. John xi. 35.

³ ἰδὼν τὴν πόλιν ἔκλαυσεν ἐπ’ αὐτήν. St. Luke xix. 41.

⁴ St. Luke xxii. 41-44.

⁵ M. Réville.

They must have present to them not merely the traditional Judge on the one hand, not merely the soft and nerveless beauty of a Syrian Adonis on the other ; but the Son of Man, sublime in noble wrath as well as noble tenderness, who uttered the parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus, as well as those of the Lost Sheep and of the Prodigal. Not written by a painter, this is yet a painter's Gospel. From it come the favourite subjects :—the Virgin and Child, Simeon, the scene with the Doctors in the Temple, the Ascension. A well-known statesman once spoke of the ephemeral nature of the results effected by his craft in contrast with the immortal productions of art, in the language of a humiliation so unfeigned that it would be improper to dispute its truth. " Our labours seem to terminate with the day on which they are done, and to leave no trace behind them. It is the happy lot of artists to produce and bequeath to mankind that which becomes part and parcel of their permanent inheritance."¹ The picture in St. Luke's Gospel is a thing of beauty, which is a joy for ever.

Above all let us compare the idyll of Bethlehem at the beginning with that yet more beautiful idyll of heaven at the close.² The first has, no doubt, commended itself more extensively to Christendom than the last. We are selfish creatures at the best.

¹ Mr. Gladstone at the banquet of the Royal Academy, 1875.

² St. Luke ii. 9, 15 ; xxiv. 50, 53.

Our gain is more to us than our Saviour's loss and humiliation. His exaltation does not commend itself to us so directly as connected with our own salvation.

When we contrast the close with the beginning of St. Luke,—the narrative of the Ascension with that of Christmas in the second chapter, we may find an inner evidence of its truth.¹ What have we at Christmas? The Son of God condescends to an unspeakable humiliation; yet the Angel of the Lord speaks to the shepherds, and the earth quivers with unearthly music. What have we at Ascension-tide? The victory is won. The shadows of Gethsemane and the clouds of Calvary have melted away. The hands of the High Priest are lifted up, and joy drops down from them like dew; and He is in the eternal calm, Who is deathless for evermore. Surely there are songs now. It may have been, as some of old thought, that God literally “went up with a merry noise, and the Lord with the voice of the trump.”² But if so, it was in heaven behind the veil, behind the silence of the infinite spaces. No echoes reach the earth. The whole narrative has the softness of some exquisite dream; but it is not evanescent like a dream. It has the repression, the naturalness, the straightforwardness of truth. The historian of the ministry of angels invents no angels' song. Those who appear are seen as "two men in white apparel."¹ If a human writer had invented or adorned the narrative, there would have been a silence round the cradle as deep as that upon the Arctic sea; there would have been lines of angels, and a great music round the disappearing form. If the story had been mythical or imaginative, all the songs would have been for the Ascension, all the silence for the Christmas; because it is divine, the song is at Christmas, the silence at the Ascension.

¹ Psalm xxiv. 3, 7, 10; xlvii. 5.

² “Ut Chrysost. notat, quod ad corporalem strepitum attinet, ascendit in silentio. Fortasse non sunt visi neque auditi chori angelorum, ut in Nativitate. Sed tamen dubitari non potest quin adessent angelorum legiones ineffabili jubilo deducentes Dominum gloriæ in gloriam suam.” Psalm xlvii. 5. BELLARM. in Psalm. i. p. 335.

St. Luke never pauses to say with self-reflective emphasis—"see how beautiful this is!" There is nothing grimacing or theatrical about his style. He leaves the picture of the King in His beauty to the heart of the Church.

The inner meaning of his purpose seems to be that of St. Bernard, "I speak of Thee in Thy sweetness more than in Thy sublimity—as the anointed, rather than as the lofty One."²

¹ ἄνδρες δύο. Acts i. 10.

² "Suavem magis quam sublimem, et unctum non altum loquor."
S. BERNARD in Cant.

II

There are two adjuncts immediately connected with this Leading Idea of our Evangelist.

I. St. Luke's is the Gospel of the holy Angels so far as this, that there is special mention of their ministry both to the Son of Man and to His people.

The Gentile evangelist; the only Gentile writer of any book of the sacred Canon, addressed himself specially to Greek Christendom, and to what in former days might have been called the "Greekish" mind.¹

The Greeks were pre-eminently endowed with the love and perception of beauty. They were unrivalled artists.² Our historians of the first rank have insensibly learned from contact with Greek models the balance of the masses of composition, the just perspective, the artistic juncture of historical narrative. Our philosophers have been trained by the majestic common sense of Aristotle, or by the superb idealism of Plato. Scarcely one of our poets of the first class has failed to feel the vivifying touch of Greek genius. The son of a stable-keeper, ignorant of Greek, capable of approaching the wonderful creations of Greek poets only with the interposition of the clumsy veil of translation and of Lemprière, became imbued with its subtle loveliness. From Keats, the sweet contagion spread to Tennyson, Arnold, and Swinburne. Even Wordsworth touched in Laodamia the calmest sweetness, the most sustained dignity which was ever attained by his thoughtful but unequal muse.

¹ "All the Greekish heads, which with one voice," &c. (Troilus and Cressida, Act i. Sc. 3. So passim in that drama.)

² μετὰ χαρίτων μάλιστ' ἂν εὐτραπέλως. (PERICLES in Thucyd. Lib. ii. c. 41.) This consummate versatility, which always managed to be graceful, is hit off by Shakespeare with his all-comprehending genius. Cf. the passage in Troilus and Cressida beginning—"The Grecian youths are full of quality." Act iv. Sc. 4. See note I, inf., p. 137.

Greek mythology was the most beautiful in the world.¹ It could incorporate and "find commodious

¹ The lively Grecian in a land of hills,
Rivers and fertile plains and sounding shores,
Under a cope of sky more variable,
Could find commodious place for every god.
In that fair clime the lonely herdsman stretch'd
On the soft grass through half a summer's day
With music lulled his indolent repose.
A distant strain—

If he chanced to hear,
Even from the blazing sun his fancy fetch'd
A beardless youth, who touch'd a golden lute,
And filled the illumined grove with ravishment.
Sunbeams upon distant hills
Might with small help from fancy be transformed Into fleet Oreads.

Withered boughs grotesque,
Stripp'd of their leaves and twigs—
These were the lurking Satyrs—Pan himself
The simple shepherds' awe-inspiring god.

WORDSWORTH, The Excursion. Book iv.

place for every god" from every climate, who brought with him the passport of charm. The land was haunted by spirits, lovely or sportive. When the light of truth fell upon the earth, did it bring nothing but disenchantment? Must earth and heaven seem poorer, unpeopled of all those radiant shapes?¹

St. Luke's Gospel must have suggested part of the answer to this question. His narrative shows us in detail the living and continuous realization of the most beautiful vision of the Hebrew story—the "angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of Man."² The words spoken by the angels in the synoptical evangelists are few and brief. We can almost count the syllables,³ accorded as if penuriously. In particular, we owe to St. Luke those angel-uttered words which

¹ The ideas referred to (supr. p. 135, and note 2) must have been present to the historian who records St. Paul's discourse at Athens. He knew the philosophical and artistic spirit of the place. He had observed (or his Apostolic prompter had taught him) the fair leisure given by the order of Athenian life and society to the ever newer newness of speculations, the later than the latest novelty of thought. (Ἀθηναῖοι δὲ πάντες . . . εἰς οὐδὲν ἕτερον ἠὲ καίρου ἢ λέγειν τι ἢ ἀκοῦειν καινότερον. Acts xvii. 21.) Sculpture is finely described—not merely as so much splendid material ("gold, or silver, or marble"), but as "gravure whose essence is art in expression and loftiness of human thought in conception." (οὐκ ὀφείλομεν νομίζειν χρυσῷ ἢ ἀργύρῳ ἢ λίθῳ, χαράγματι τέχνης καὶ ἐνθυμήσεως ἀνθρώπου τὸ θεῖον εἶναι ὅμοιον. Acts xvii. 29, 30.)

² Genesis xxviii. 12. St. John i. 52.

³ St. Matthew i. 20, 21; ii. 13-20; xxviii. 5-8. St. Mark vi. 6, 7. Contrast St. Luke i. 13-18, 28-37; ii. 10-17; xxiv. 5-8.

form so exquisite a shrine for the dogma of the Incarnation.¹

Our most complete revelations, whether of the functions of the holy angels towards the Saviour during His life-walk on earth, or of their relation to us, are to be found in St. Luke.

(a) We may compare the briefer version of Christ's words in St. Mark with the more articulately divided threefold glory of the second coming in St. Luke,² wherein the holy angels have their distinct region of circumstance. (b) We should also notice the emphatic heightening of joy or shame in acknowledgment or denial by the Son of Man, "in presence of the angels of God."³ (c) In words recorded by St. Luke alone, Jesus brings the conversion of sinners within the cognizance and sympathy of angels. "The tears of penitents are the wine of angels."⁴ (d) To St. Luke we owe the clearer colouring of the noble passage which contains one of the few particular revelations of the condition of the future life for the redeemed. "They neither marry nor are given in marriage, for they are equal unto the angels."⁵ (e) The incident of the

¹ St. Luke i. 35.

² Cf. the more indefinite "in the glory of the Father with the holy angels" (St. Mark viii. 38) with ἐν τῇ δόξῃ αὐτοῦ καὶ τοῦ πατρὸς καὶ τῶν ἁγίων ἀγγέλων—(St. Luke ix. 26).

³ St. Luke xii. 8, 9.

⁴ Ibid. xv. 10.

⁵ Cf. St. Luke xx. 36 with St. Matthew xxii. 30. St. Mark xii. 25. See the very interesting passage in Pastor Pastorum, pp. 409, 410.

strengthening angel in Gethsemane is one of the peculiar gems of the third Gospel.¹ (f) There is a special fulness in the narrative about angels at the Resurrection.² (g) To this we may well add no less than twenty-two records of angels in the Acts of the Apostles. Two of these may be singled out as indicating how familiar the thought of angels was to the mind of the holy writer. "An angel of the Lord said, Go ye and stand and speak in the temple to the people all the words of this life."³ Much grammatical ingenuity has been wasted upon words which seem so singular. "Departed this life" upon a tombstone is intelligible enough to us—from our point of view. The psychological evangelist felt that an angel would speak of eternal life as "this life," from his point of view. It was the life of eternity which the Apostle proclaimed in time. Once more. "They saw the face of Stephen as it had been the face of an angel."⁴ This is not a touch of facile poetry. The writer knew too much about the angels to use their name so lightly. (h) It should be noticed that there are more glimpses of the world unseen in this than in any other Gospel.⁵ We must observe at the close of this section that the

¹ St. Luke xxii. 43.

² Ibid. xxiv. 4, 5; cf. Acts i. 10.

³ Acts v. 25.

⁴ Ibid. vi. 17.

⁵ Ibid. xvi. 9, 19-31. "Paradise" in xxiii. 43.

ministry of holy angels to our Lord, during and after the temptation, recorded by the two other synoptics,¹ is omitted by St. Luke. A Leading Idea with an evangelist is not an overmastering hobby. It is kept within bounds by a divine sobriety of judgment. It does not obtrude itself upon us, but requites reverent study.

2. The third Gospel is the Gospel of Poetry.

This is the case, not only as regards the many incidents which the imagination of Christendom has always felt to be in their nature poetical as distinct from legendary.

Rhythmic bursts in parallelism, and what we may call choral vibrations, are of frequent occurrence. The angels' song is incorporated with the Eucharistic Services; the Magnificat, Nunc Dimittis, Benedictus, with the liturgies of the Christian world. The language seems at times just to stop short upon the verge of a burst of chanting; we are half disappointed at not hearing the Amen.² In the parable of the Prodigal there is a refrain. It is as if the heart of God conformed to the way of human emotion, which repeats the language of its sorrow turned into joy, with a sweet iteration, circling round and round the grief which has so long been habitual, and the joy which displaces it.¹ The acclamation of the multitude on Palm Sunday is given in a highly liturgical form as compared with the parallels in the two other synoptics,² and surely points back to the first Gloria in Excelsis. The pathetic cry of Jesus to the "daughters of Jerusalem" has inspired Mendelssohn.³ Think too of the anthem-like close—"continually in the temple praising and blessing God"—with the Amen, the natural close of the liturgical Gospel (unhappily expunged in the R.V.). The whole Gospel is like a noble drama, which has a chorus to meet from time to time the splendour, or the pathos, or the majesty, of its development, now wailing, now triumphing—or we seem to be walking in a sacred cloister, not knowing when some hand will "rip up the organ with its thunder-stroke," and fill the place with music.

¹ St. Matthew iv. 11; St. Mark i. 13.

² "The shepherds returned, glorifying and praising God." St. Luke ii. 20.

The question of the personal appearance of the Son of Man in the days of His flesh has often excited a reverent curiosity. It may be νεκρὸς ἦν,

¹ οὗτος ὁ υἱὸς μου
καὶ ἀνέζησεν.
ἦν ἀπολωλώς,
καὶ εὗρέθη (xv. 24).

Cf. ὁ ἀδελφός σου οὗτος νεκρὸς ἦν κ.τ.λ. (ibid. 31).

² St. Luke xix. 38; cf. St. Matthew xxi. 9; St. Mark xi. 9, 10; St. John xii. 13.

³ St. Luke xxiii. 28.

said that there are two types of this image in Christendom. In one, He is hard and stern, wan and worn;¹ in the other He has a soft fair beauty, with chestnut hair.² Every Christian

¹ Justin M. appears to express a wide-spread feeling (εἰς τὴν πρώτην παρουσίαν τοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐν ᾗ καὶ ἄτιμος καὶ ἀειδὴς καὶ θνητός, κ.τ.λ. Dialog. c. Tryph. 14. δύο παρουσίαι . . . μία μὲν ἐν ᾗ παθητὸς καὶ ἄτιμος καὶ ἀειδής. ibid. 49, cf. 85, 100, 121, also, almost like a formula, Apolo. i. 52). See RHEINWALD. Die Kirche Archäologie. 397, n. 4.

² This view is represented with great beauty, but perhaps in somewhat too luxuriant and florid a style, in Sir Edwin Arnold's splendid poem, after the so-called letter of Lentulus.

“Wine-colour'd shone His hair
Glittering and waved, an aureole folded down
Its long ray-lighted locks, which fell and flowed
Fair-parted from the middle of His head,
After the manner of the Nazarites.
Even and clear His forehead ; nose and mouth
Faultless of grace, and full and soft the beard
Forked, of the hazelled colour of His hair.
The great eyes blue and radiant.
. . . . Not oftentimes seen to smile,
More oft to weep
Among the sons of men fairest and first.”

The Light of the World, bk. iii. ; The Alabaster Box, pp. 134, 135.

In a life of our Lord, which attained much celebrity in France about a quarter of a century ago, it is wisely said, “M. Renan supposes that Jesus had one of those exquisite faces which sometimes appear in the Jewish race (Vie de Jésus, p. 80). It is remarkable that the East, in its mosaics and pictures, has always presented the Christ with a severe face, while the West has sunk to a soft fair face heart may be sure that there was about Him moral beauty ; the beauty of thought and expression, which radiates through the veil of flesh and sense, which is consistent with sorrow, with a body destitute of the lines of grace, with the trials that make a man old before his time.¹ Half the ugliness of human faces is moral ugliness. There are, no doubt, faces beautiful in youth, which, as Plato says, we can easily foretell will be hideous in old age. But infinitely worse are the sinister look of craft, the leer, the scowl, the heaviness, which are the visible expression of petty designs puckering a network of lines—of unworthy thoughts and ignoble lives. Half the beauty in the world is moral beauty too, which shines through the eyes that are pure and candid, and breathes through the lips that speak of truth and gentleness. Whatever His form and features may have been, He must have looked beautiful who said—"and He layeth it on His shoulders." Weary as He was and wan, white with exhaustion and dropped with with a rich colour. I must confess that the grand mosaics of the Calvary at Jerusalem, and of the beautiful Byzantine apses, possessed by Greece and Italy, go more directly to the soul. The gentle Galilean cannot properly be represented with light hair, nor with a curled beard, gracefully divided. Art should avoid the hardness of the mosaists without falling into the insipidity of our painters."—MICHON, Vie de Jésus, i. 197, 198.

¹ "Which for a face not beautiful does more Than beauty for the fairest face can do."

WORDSWORTH, Excursion, bk. vi.

blood, He must have looked beautiful who said—“Father, forgive them.”

III

One inference occurs naturally.

Such a Gospel, received as an authoritative record, must produce a religion of beauty. Of Christian rites or symbolism (save of the highest of all—the Holy Eucharist); of painting, poetry, vestments, sacred buildings—it says nothing. But sacred art must awaken at its touch.

There are good people who sometimes ask—
“will nothing ensure us a régime of ugliness in public worship?” Such a régime is, they think, mysteriously connected with purity of doctrine. It is safe from its uninteresting placidity. Above all, it is very cheap.

One thing, if it were only possible to secure it, might bring about the desired end. If these votaries could only get rid of St. Luke’s Gospel and of the consequences which flow from it; if they could obliterate not only the millions of copies, printed upon paper, but the ineffaceable memories stamped upon innumerable hearts—the shapes transferred from it to the canvas, or where the sunlight is sheathed in the painted pane—the music which has formed the golden commentary upon its inspired chants!

From one evil this tendency in St. Luke's Gospel may save young souls. A man of lofty character and noble genius, whose life up to middle age was that of a saintly minister of the Calvinistic Church of Geneva, but who afterwards parted not only with faith in Christ but with belief in God and immortality—placed in an English parsonage as the pupil of a devoted English clergyman, in the course of a period of severe study became the subject of what appeared to himself and to others an entire conversion. More than thirty years after in analysing the movement under whose influence he had come in the Monmouthshire rectory, M. Scherer wrote—"Faith became a credo; one had only to possess its mechanism and repeat its formula. No more contemplation or poetry! When the human soul turned from earth to heaven, asking to slake its immortal thirst, it was answered by arid receipts or barren syllogisms. The love of the past was heresy. Attachment to the fair forms of worship was superstition. The yearning after adoration, penitence, self-sacrifice, was a departure from evangelical faith. All the vagueness and tenderness, all that is most religious in religion, was neglected or held cheap."¹ Who can tell what fatal effect such an experience at the beginning of the religious life may have had upon a sensitive spirit—gifted with such a perception of intellectual and spiritual beauty? One result of the principle of St. Luke's Gospel would be to save religion from a shape so rigid and repulsive.

¹ Edmond Scherer. Par Octave Gréard de l'Académie Française (p. 15).

Above all—for how many does life, as it draws on towards its evening, become ugly and narrow in uncongenial surroundings. It becomes ugly. When we started it seemed to us that the fields through which we were walking brought us to a thousand forms, to any of which we might address ourselves at will, and if we found it disappointing turn readily to another. But, after a few years, we discover that we are tied to one remorseless, angular reality, from which we can never emancipate ourselves. Life becomes narrow too.

“The ample proposition that hope makes
In all designs begun on earth below
Fails in the promised largeness.”¹

Oh that we might lay hold upon the Christ of St. Luke's delineation! These words of the old prophet, poet as well as seer—able with one pencil-stroke to indicate upon a limited canvas the distances which present infinity to the imagination—become true in a higher sense than the first. Of the child of God these are the privileges. Loftiness of creed—“he shall dwell on high.” Security in order and dogma—“his place of defence shall be the munitions of rocks.” The food of the word and of the blessed Eucharist—"his bread shall be given him." A spiritual life issuing from his baptism—"his waters shall be sure."¹ Something more. The promise turns from history or prediction to an address to the believer personally.² Christ shall be manifested to him, as St. Luke draws Him—"thine eyes shall see the King in His beauty." One magic word suggests a boundless enlargement of soul from this. It is a strange word, such as only poets can find—"they shall behold a land of farnesses,"—of sunny distances with distances still beyond.³

¹ Troilus and Cressida. (Act i. Sc. 3.)

¹ Isaiah xxxiii. 16.

² Note the change from "his place of defence, his bread, his waters" (v. 16), to "thine eyes" (v. 17).

³ מִרְחָקִים. Les Lointains gives us a good idea of the lofty and picturesque indefiniteness of the Hebrew word.

IV

THE LEADING IDEAS OF ST. LUKE'S GOSPEL

D

IN THE NARRATIVE OF THE INCARNATION

“And the angel said unto them, Fear not : for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord. And this shall be a sign unto you : Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger. And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men.” And it came to pass, as the angels were gone away from them into heaven, the shepherds said one to another, Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us.”—ST. LUKE ii. 10-15.

THE Leading Ideas of the narrative of the Incarnation, in St. Luke's Gospel, the aspects from which he himself regarded it, and from which he wished the Church to regard it, are suggested in a summary form by this glorious passage.

The Saviour, the Messiah and Lord, is no shadowy, unreal being. He is really born, a real Babe, wrapped in swaddling clothes, in a definite place at a definite time.¹ The Incarnation is real. He is Incarnate not only for Israel, but for all who have a share in humanity.² His Incarnation is of universal significance and efficacy. Earth itself is the sphere of the peace which He brings; the good-will of the heart of God encircles, and dwells in men.³ The Incarnation is a joyful dogma; a fact to be received with enthusiastic delight. "I bring you good tidings of great joy."

¹ ἐτέχθη σήμερον . . . ἐν πόλει Δαυεὶδ . . . βρέφος . . . ἐσπαργανωμένον. St. Luke ii. 11, 12.

² This cannot be concluded—at least directly—from the first part of the angel's message. "To all people" (A.V.) goes beyond παντὶ τῷ λαῷ, "to all the people" (R.V.).

³ The true reading and division seems to be:

δόξα ἐν ὑψίστοις Θεῷ, καὶ ἐπὶ γῆς εἰρήνη,
ἐν ἀνθρώποις εὐδοκία.

The third line of the parallelism suggests the connecting link. The two first lines have the character of a prayer; ἔστω is understood.

"Be there glory to God in the highest;
And be there on earth peace—"

If the relation of the third line were to be logically expressed, we should have a causal particle (ὅτι or the like), and a verb in the indicative (ἔστω).

"For amongst men is God's good-will."

(See Commentaire sur l'Evang. de Saint Luc. Par F. GODET, tom. i. 105, 106.)

The Incarnation is the most beautiful of the manifestations of God. History, without ceasing to be history, walks under a sky of magic, and speaks in the lofty and rhythmical language of poetical intensity.

I

The Incarnation is real. St. Luke's Leading Idea is this.

At a definite date in human history a Divine Person assumed Human Nature by a birth in time of a virgin's womb, in a scene of incomparable beauty, with the admiring sympathy of the hosts of heaven, with the instinctive enthusiastic rapture of elect and meditative souls. That birth, wrought by a new contact with the creative power of God the Holy Ghost, was a true human birth. Whatever human mothers contribute to the entire production of their children was contributed by her who is truly the Mother of Jesus—viz., conception, formation, nativity.¹ It was a true human body. There was with equal truth a true human soul—i.e. with a will really capable of choice; with an intellect really capable of learning; with really felt desires for sustenance as regarded food, for sympathy as regarded companionship, for deliverance

¹ "Ex Mariæ sumptum est substantiâ quicquid non solum ad σύλλημψιν (conceptionem); sed etiam ad nutrimentum sancti fœtûs cedebat." (BENGEL. Gnom. in Luc. i. 35.)

as regarded pain—with real sinless emotions such as indignation at wrong, pity, wonder, vivid expectation.¹

The reality of the Incarnation, St. Luke shows us, was twofold—(1) physiological, and (2) historical.

(1) The Incarnation was a physiological reality.

The same medical preparation which pervades the whole texture of St. Luke's language influences and forms a Leading Idea in his record of the Incarnation. The angel's answer to Mary's question "how shall this be?" preserved in the third Gospel, is—"The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee; therefore also that Holy Thing which is to be born,² shall be called the Son of God."³ Surely we have here a sentence whose fulness of thought and delicate transparency of expression come to us from the sphere in which the Miracle of miracles was wrought. The whole sentence is packed with thought. "There is something which is to be born; that which is to be born is holy; that Holy Thing is to be, and to be owned to be, the Son of God. All this is inferred from the words just preceding in the angel's utterance in this way—'The Holy Ghost shall come upon ¹ The student should read again and again the wonderfully weighty and compacted sentences in Isaac Barrow On the Creed. Sermon i.

² τὸ γεννώμενον ἅγιον. The words ἐκ σου are, probably, to be rejected.

³ St. Luke i. 35.

thee ;' therefore 'that which is to be born shall be called Holy.' 'The power of the Highest shall overshadow thee ;' therefore 'that Holy Thing shall be called the Son of God.'"¹ The whole sentence is a divine mixture of reserve and of enthusiasm. It is like a smile of heaven over the glory of the eternal wisdom and love in bringing its most consummate work from the labyrinth of ante-natal fatalities through which man passes into the world. It is thus that the purity of an angel

¹ Bengel, ut supra.

Père Didon finely points to nature, "where various kingdoms superpose one another, so to speak, and mutually envelope each other. The kingdom of life is added to that of matter, the animal kingdom to that of life, the human kingdom to that of animality. But now we have reached the kingdom of God and that of the Son of God in humanity. All these successive geneses constitute in their totality the lofty dream of the earth. They are all mysterious ; and the more perfect the thing created the deeper is the mystery. Life is more hidden than matter ; the animal is more enigmatic than organic life ; man is more inscrutable than the animal ; Jesus is more impenetrable than all. He who would scrutinize the origins of things may grasp the material conditions in which beings are produced, but the first cause eludes his experiments. Whence comes matter ? whence life ? whence sensitive existence ? whence being which thinks ? whence genius ? whence comes the Christ ? The science which confines itself within phenomena answers to these questions—"I do not know." The reason which perceives causes replies—"from the Spirit of God." Under what factual and historical form was the action of the spirit manifested in the genesis of Jesus ? We must ask the Gospel documents, the only pages in antiquity which teach us with any detail upon that event, concealed, almost unnoticed, which has yet succeeded in changing the face of the world." (Jésus Christ, Liv. I. Les Origines de Jésus. Chap. ii. Sa Conception. Tom. I. pp. 34, 35.)

speaks to the purity of a virgin. Yet if not a word too much is said for the delicacy of a maiden's ear, not a word too little is employed to indicate even the physiological process by which the Incarnation was effected. It is the 139th Psalm translated into one of the tongues of heaven. Yet not the less really is the material process summarised which had been so nobly prophesied in the psalm of the Incarnation.¹

As a consequence of this Leading Idea it is natural that the evangelist should mark the successive stages in the early development of Him who was so wonderfully born. He is "conceived in the womb of Mary"; "the fruit of her womb"; "the Holy Thing to be born"; "her Son"; "the Babe"; "the Child"; "the Boy"; the Man of "about thirty years old."²

¹ Not conceal'd my substance was from Thee
When in the secret covert I was made,
Down in the dim depths of the under-world,
Wrought with a manifold broidery divine.
The germ that was myself Thine eyes did see,
And in Thy book these things were written all—
The days were outlined, ere a day had dawn'd.

PSALM CXXXIX.

² συλλήμψη ἐν γαστρὶ (St. Luke i. 31). ὁ καρπὸς τῆς κοιλίας σου (ver. 42). ἔτεκεν τὸν υἱὸν αὐτῆς (ii. 7). τὸ βρέφος (ver. 16). παιδίον (ver. 27). Ἰησοῦς ὁ παῖς (ver. 43). The last passage to be noted here is—καὶ αὐτὸς ἦν ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἀρχόμενος ὥσει ἐτῶν τριάκοντα (Luke iii. 23). Here ἀρχόμενος and ἦν are not to be joined = "Jesus was beginning to be about thirty years of age"—but taken thus = "and He Himself, Jesus, on beginning His ministry, was about

(2) For St. Luke the Incarnation was also a historical reality. And this is a Leading Idea of the early part of his Memoir.

In this part of our subject we can do more than appeal to the opening verses of the Gospel.¹

In the section now before us this reality is emphasized by a date which was intended to fix its place in the domain of history.² This is supplemented by other chronological marks which touch upon the records of several governments—and which, when compared with the statement of the Saviour's age, materially aid in bringing us to the period of His Birth.³

Still further. The Birth of Jesus as a matter of history derives confirmation from the general character of St. Luke as a grave chronicler. It is thirty years of age." For the growth of Jesus in wisdom see Note C at the end of this work.

¹ ἔγνωθεν, ἀκριβῶς, καθεξῆς (St. Luke i. 3). Of the three notions conveyed by the word καθεξῆς (temporal, local, and logical), the first is commonest with St. Luke, in whom alone among the New Testament writers the word is to be found. (St. Luke i. 3; viii. 1. Acts iii. 34; xi. 4; xviii. 23.) "St. Luke," says Tischendorf, "thus professes to write the Life of Christ with historical accuracy, i. e. preserving the order of events where it seemed necessary." Three facts confirm this interpretation: (1) that certain chronological marks are given by St. Luke alone (ii. 1; iii. 1-23); (2) that the narrative is made to fall into certain temporal limits, and especially, according to Jewish use, into weeks (σάββατα); (3) that he occasionally intimates that the exact order is either unknown to him, or left undetermined by him.

² The taxing under Cyrenius. St. Luke ii. 1-3.

³ St. Luke iii. 1-3, 23.

not merely that he claims this for himself in the three sober and sensible adverbs lately quoted. His modest claim is justified by the treatise which he evidently regards as the second part of his work—the Acts of the Apostles. We find in it an evidently careful use not only of oral information, but of memoranda and documents.¹ Now historical accuracy is not a capricious and intermittent impulse. It is a fixed habit of mind, the result of a particular discipline. Historians of the school of the author of the Acts of the Apostles are not men to build a flamboyant portal of romance

¹ We may refer to the letter of Claudius Lysias (Acts xxiii. 26–31); and to the peculiar amplitude and exactness in the reports of the speeches of Demetrius and of the town-clerk (Acts xix. 23–41). The account of the voyage and shipwreck of St. Paul proves that St. Luke was a most acute and accurate observer, and a thoroughly careful and conscientious writer. “By a criticism of this kind,” observes the Bishop of Carlisle in reference to Mr. Smith of Jordanhill’s work on the subject, “we pass by one step over the eighteen intervening centuries; and we are able to say, with a sense of absolute security, that the man who, in the anxiety and weariness of a tempestuous voyage, even in a wreck, was able to observe and record with such demonstrated accuracy the incidents of his adventure, must be worthy of credit in any case in which he pledges himself to have carefully investigated the facts that he records as true.” See the masterly passage in The Foundations of the Creed. By the Bishop of Carlisle. (Pp. 108 127.) St. Augustine seems to have contemplated this specially in regard to the history of the Birth. “Qui non solum . . . ex ore ejus audita, vel ab Illo sub oculis suis operata, dicta et facta, meminerant; verum etiam, quæ priusquam Illi adhæserant, in ejus nativitate, vel infantiâ vel pueritiâ . . . sive ab Ipso, sive a parentibus ejus, sive a quibuslibet aliis, certissimis indiciis et fidelissimis testimoniis . . . generi humano annuntiare curaverunt.” (De Consens. Evang. Lib. i. Tom. iii. Pt. 1, p. 1043. Ed. Migne.)

over the entrance to the austere temple of Truth. From what we learn of St. Luke in his later work we may be sure that he had authentic sources of information open to him, which cannot now be traced. Brief memoirs of many incidents may well have existed in certain families or assemblies. As regards "the Bethlehem narrative," we can scarcely doubt from what source the information was supplied. There is much which seems to reveal the head and heart of Mary. Mothers are the best biographers of their children. At all events we may be assured from what we know of him that St. Luke had authentic sources of information open to him ; and that as he used such documents for occasions of much less importance, so he did not neglect them for the record of the most momentous events in human history.¹

Such is St. Luke's first great Leading Idea of the Incarnation. It is a reality, physiologically and historically.

II

A second great Leading Idea is the universality of the Incarnation.

The remedy is not merely for the Jewish race ;

¹ It is instructive to notice the steady influence which, in such an age, kept the narrative of the sacred Childhood well within the lines of ideal truth. A romance would have given us an obtrusively superhuman, i. e. an unhuman babyhood. The Apocryphal Gospels are an instructive object-lesson in the evidences of Christianity.

or for a selected few, the special favourites of heaven. It is for the whole diseased material of human nature; for all the sinful, the weary, the suffering; for the whole great army of the guilty and miserable in every land. That which the Son of God took into real union with Himself is humanity. Hence in the Gospel before us, Jesus meets all who cross His path with impartial sympathy. Hence, just before He leaves the earth, He commands His disciples to preach "repentance and remission of sins in His name unto all the nations."¹ Hence also the Gospel record of "all that Jesus began both to do and to teach,"² is the fitting prelude to a narrative which tells us of all which the ascended Jesus continued to do and to teach from heaven by the agency of His servants "in Jerusalem and in all Judæa, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth."³ The Leading Idea of this universal Incarnation stands in the forefront of the universal Gospel. It finds a nobler and loftier expression in Simeon's song—"Thy salvation, which Thou hast prepared⁴ before the face of *all the peoples*⁵—a light

¹ εἰς πάντα τὰ ἔθνη. St. Luke xxiv. 47.

² Acts i. 1.

³ Ibid. v. 8.

⁴ We may translate the Hebraizing abstract into the concrete, and remember that "the salvation which Thou hast prepared" = "the Saviour whom thou hast prepared before the face of all the peoples." (St. Luke ii. 30, 31.)

⁵ κατὰ πρόσωπον πάντων τῶν λαῶν. For the light thrown upon many passages by this Leading Idea the student may add the unto the unveiling of the Gentiles, and the glory of Thy people, Israel.”¹

III

A third Leading Idea in St. Luke’s narrative of the Incarnation and Birth of Jesus is that it is joyful.

When the voice even of her who had conceived “the Holy Thing which was to be born” reached Elizabeth, the Holy Ghost filled her with a sweet surprise, and “the babe leaped in her womb for joy.”² The angel of the Lord upon the first Christmas Eve struck the key-note, not only of the Incarnation prelude, but of the whole Gospel. “Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy.” As it begins, so it ends. “And they worshipped Him, and returned to Jerusalem with great joy.”³

IV

A fourth Leading Idea of St. Luke’s narrative—and one peculiarly adapted for Gentiles, and especially for Greeks—is that it is beautiful.

St. Luke’s is the painter’s Gospel. And his “unbelievers” (St. Luke xii. 46) compared with “the hypocrites” (St. Matthew xxiv. 51). The former was felt to be wanted in the Gentile Gospel.

¹ St. Luke ii. 30-33.

² Ibid. i. 44.

³ Ibid. ii. 10; xxiv. 52. Cf. 1 St. John i. 4. “These things we write that your joy may be fulfilled.” The Christmas chimes are never quite out of hearing in the Church.

history of the great truth is placed in idyllic surroundings. So much so that sometimes it is more than insinuated that history never is idyllic ; that its car is always drawn by common-place steeds through common-place scenery ; that the music to which it moves may have a momentary pathos or romance, but never the sustained loveliness of a Pastoral Symphony.

St. Luke's is the poet's Gospel. Its beginning is interspersed with sacred canticles, with bursts of holy song. Fragments of noble liturgies may be detected more than once in the sequel of the narrative. But in the prelude of the Gospel the liturgical chant is heard at every turn. Every one remembers the words of Elizabeth, the plain song of the angel of the Lord, "the descant" of "the heavenly soldiers," and those three other effusions so familiar as the Magnificat, Nunc Dimittis, and Benedictus.¹ The words of Gabriel, also, at the Annunciation, run into that parallelism which is the necessary form of Hebraic poetical elevation.²

These canticles, indeed, are specially appealed to by Strauss and Renan as proofs that the narrative is unhistorical. But the fact that they were improvised need produce no difficulty. For they were not composed under the difficult conditions either of classical or of modern poetry, restricted by quantity and rhyme. Poetry is the impassioned rhetoric of the East. When the prophet is elevated by the glory or darkened by the terrors of the future; when his voice trembles with pathos or rises into indignation, his style spontaneously assumes the form of Hebrew poetry. We are told that poetry is neither extemporaneous nor epidemic. Our poetry fortunately is not; but our rhetoric (perhaps too frequently) is both one and the other. Given a receptive and sensitive mind, steeped in the style of the psalmists, and the awe mixed with rapture which must have been caused by such incidents if they really occurred—the production of such canticles becomes entirely credible, in the case of pious Israelites deeply penetrated by the sacred literature of their race.

¹ St. Luke i. 30-34, 35, 42-46, 67-80 ; ii. 10-18, 29-33.

² Ibid. i. 30-37.

Let us pause for a moment to consider whether we cannot find evidence in the context of some of these canticles that they belong to the time to which they are assigned, and can be referred to no other, without supposing an exquisite literary tact totally alien from apocryphal forgeries.

Take the hymn of Zacharias. What should we expect from him? The hope of Jesus Christ and of salvation, rising indeed a little beyond the Psalms, but still in Jewish colours, and under Jewish images. Precisely such is its character. The God whom Zacharias blesses is Israel's God. The mighty salvation is in David's house. It is the fulfilment of prophecy in pursuance of the promise to Abraham.¹ The whole groundwork of the hymn is Jewish. The sun is here to be a dawn as here, "the day-spring from on high,"² but there are notes which let us behold the broad light upon the great deep.

Similarly with the songs of the Blessed Virgin and of Simeon. Our Church uses them as daily psalms, and applies them to Christ. But those who had seen the Incarnate Lord, who had beheld Him risen and ascending, would have spoken far more strongly. Their songs would have been more like "Rock of Ages" or "When I survey the wondrous Cross." They would not have been echoes of the harp of David, or such as of the harps of heaven—"That wast slain and hast redeemed us to God by Thy blood." "This hymn, if incommensurable earlier than Zacharias, is more incommensurable later," says Dr. M.H. Such poetic mountain-tops in the distance with such more over the path that lead to them, such a firm grasp upon salvation and redemption, such a clear view of its character as combining in the "revelation of sin,"³ yet such silence as to its details; can only belong to the thin border-line of a period which was neither quite Jewish nor quite Christian. A little less, and these songs would be purely Jewish ; a little more and they would be purely Christian.¹

¹ St. Luke i. 68, 69, 73.

² Ibid. ver. 76.

³ Ibid. i. 75. where sunlight is dark shadows. (1) Stigmata i. 14.

St. Luke's idea of beauty (for a reason which has been stated at length²) includes also another element. It might now be called visionary and mythic, or a tendency to personify abstract conception. The third Gospel is throughout a Gospel of the holy Angels—i.e. we read more of their ministry, in connection with Jesus, than elsewhere. This is especially marked at the outset.³

These, then, are St. Luke's Leading Ideas of the Incarnation and Birth of Jesus Christ:—(1) The Incarnation is a reality—physically, with the conception, formation, and nativity of the Holy Child ; historically, with a definite starting-point in time and place of a truly human life. (2) The Incarnation is a fact of universal import. "When Thou tookest manhood upon Thee to deliver it, Thou didst not abhor the Virgin's womb." The Redemption which issues from the Incarnation as from its vital principle is not partial and "particular." It is the fountain-head of a message addressed to every form of sin and misery in every land. It is the implied starting-point not only of the Gospel itself, but of the appended Church-history by the same hand which tells us how "the message, going

¹ This argument was originally suggested by Dr. Mill's Pantheistic Theories of the Gospel.

² Discussion iv. c. ii. 1.

³ St. Luke i. 11-26, 35 ; ii. 9, 10-16.

forth from the upper-chamber, spread to temples, houses, streets, market-places, inns, prisons, camps, courts, chariots, ships, countries, cities, islands ; to Jews, Gentiles, magistrates, officers, soldiers, eunuchs, prisoners, slaves, freemen, women, children, sailors ; reaching finally Athens and Rome.”¹

The Man is the fitting symbol throughout ; it is the universal Gospel of the universal Incarnation.

(3) The Incarnation is joyful. Its very idea is “good tidings of great joy.” (4) The Incarnation is beautiful, with the beauty of an idyll, of a poem—with angels ascending and descending upon the Son of Man. The story which enshrines it has become part and parcel of the beauty of the starry night.

¹ BENDEL. Gnom. Act. Apost. ad init.

IV

THE LEADING IDEAS OF ST. LUKE'S GOSPEL

E

THE DANGER OF RICHES AND THE COMPENSA- TIONS OF POVERTY

“Yet lackest thou one thing ; sell all that thou hast, and distribute unto the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven ; and come, follow Me.”—ST. LUKE xviii. 22.

THE incident to which these words belong¹ is not peculiar to St. Luke, but common to all the synoptics.² This saying, however, gives a convenient starting-point for the consideration of one of the Leading Ideas of St. Luke—the dangers of money, and the compensations of poverty.

I

The danger of money forms one Leading Idea of St. Luke's Gospel.

¹ St. Luke xviii. 18-31.

² St. Matthew xix. 16-30. St. Mark x. 17-32.

The spring of a sweet aspiration after a new life came to this ruler of a synagogue, while yet young.¹ In the freshness of youth's enthusiasm he ran and knelt to the great Teacher.² His desires ran naturally from his training in two channels. He wanted a great Rabbi and a perfect rule. The dialogue ends in that stern, awful saying, "sell all that thou hast and distribute unto the poor—and come, follow Me." Then the vivid pencil of St. Mark shows us the gathering of a grey cloud upon the sunshine of the enthusiast's face. His countenance fell and lowered in a moment upon the word.³ "He became exceeding sorrowful, for he was very rich."⁴

This passage is not a favourite with many preachers. They feel it necessary to explain away the Saviour's words, "if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments."⁵ They say very bitter things against the young ruler. He is a St. Sebastian, pinned through and pierced with the many arrows of evangelical pulpits. "He had not clear views." It would be strange if he had, as he was not a prophet. "He did not follow Christ." Who can answer for himself that he would have done so, at the time, and in the circumstances?

¹ ἄρχων. St. Luke xviii. 16. νεανίσκος. St. Matthew xix. 20.

² St. Mark x. 17.

³ ὁ δὲ στυγνάσας ἐπὶ τῷ λόγῳ (cf. for the word στυγνάζων ὁ οὐρανός. St. Matthew xvi. 3).

⁴ St. Luke xviii. 23.

⁵ St. Matthew xix. 17.

Jesus bent on him one of those penetrating glances which look into a man's being, and with it gave the young ruler His one love.¹ That love is not lightly bestowed, nor lightly taken away. It is a net with so many meshes ; a voice with so many intonations ; a finger whose divine subtlety touches so many springs and bolts of the door of the human heart. Perhaps one day the young man followed Jesus better and with fuller adhesion than he could have done at that moment. Perhaps he was one of those who only a little later sold "lands and houses, and brought the prices of the things that were sold, and laid them at the Apostles' feet," so that "distribution was made unto each, according as any one had need."² Yet a little, and the seed of thought sown in his heart by the great Sower might come to maturity, so that he could say—"I through the law died unto the law, that I might live unto God."³

At all events, the danger of riches is shown in one of those immortal images which have passed into the common speech of humanity.⁴ The illus-

¹ ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς ἐμβλέψας αὐτῷ ἠγάπησεν αὐτόν. (St. Mark x. 21.)
 "Amavit quodam quasi risu oculorum." (BENGEL in loc.)

² Acts iv. 34-36. The διεδίδετο of ver. 35 answers remarkably to the διάδος of St. Luke xviii. 22.

³ Galatians ii. 19.

⁴ St. Luke xviii. 24, 25. The expression is found in the Talmud and in the Koran. (Sur. vii. 38.) It was from ignorance of the Semitic idea that many Greek interpreters substituted κάμιλος, a rope. (See Renan. Vie de Jésus. Pp. 175, 176, n. 2. Cf. also St. Matthew xxiii. 24.)

tration is drawn from one of the common popular stories current in the East, which would be recognized by all. There were far-spread tales and legends of some enchanted city, with a gate of entrance which was a needle's eye. Among the applicants for admission was a rich merchant, riding on a camel, with its long neck and humped back, packed with precious wares. The rich man, who trusts in riches, fares like the merchant of the story. . He cannot pass through the magic gate into the radiant city without the divine spell which makes him free of the land of the spirit.¹

To this part of the subject we shall return at the close of this Discussion. But to prove that the danger of riches is one of the Leading Ideas in St. Luke's Gospel we need only at present point to two passages. St. Luke's version of the Sermon on the Mount has for its first beatitudes—"blessed be ye poor; blessed are ye that hunger now;" for its first woes—"woe unto you that are rich; woe unto you that are full." The parable of the rich man and Lazarus is peculiar to the third Gospel.²

¹ See the interesting pages in Lange—Life of the Lord Jesus Christ. Book 4, Part 5, § 35. (Vol. II. pp. 475-482. English Translation.)

² St. Luke vi. 20, 21, 24, 25; xvi. 19-31. On the section xii. 13-22, see infra.

II

This Leading Idea has for its completion the compensations of Poverty. The Jesus of St. Luke's Gospel has for the poor His tenderest words and sweetest promises. His mother offers the Purification of the poor. The first specific declaration of His teaching therein is that application of prophecy to Himself in the synagogue at Nazareth—"the Spirit of the Lord hath anointed Me to preach the gospel to the poor." The first sentence of the other version of the Sermon on the Mount is—"blessed be ye poor." Those whom true disciples are counselled to invite are "the poor, the maimed, the halt, the blind, who cannot recompense them." The beggar is carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom.¹

Believers in Christ try to render this compensation of poverty intelligible to Christian reason exercised upon social problems; and truly they can do so. Yet after all explanation a something always remains in His teaching about poverty, which our generation keeps as far out of sight as possible. This generation has its ear and heart finely touched to hear the bitter cry of the "submerged tenth." Social Christianity, like moral philosophy, has a great proposition whose "categorical form" involves an "epitactic meaning." "Poverty is blessed;" then "give alms." But have not even those who appeal to Christ's name most loudly grown afraid to tell the poor that, after all, their poverty, if rightly borne, has one special blessing—the smile and the promise of Christ?¹

¹ St. Luke ii. 7-24; iv. 18; vi. 20; xiv. 13; xvi. 22. The great Apostle, whom all antiquity so closely connected with St. Luke's Gospel, gives us a biography of Jesus in one word. It was one act of poverty (ἐπτῶχευσεν, 2 Corinthians viii. 9). The New Testament gives us two more of these wonderful compressed biographies of Jesus—one, His outward life, with its ceaseless activities (διήλθεν εὐεργετῶν, Acts x. 38); one, His inner life, with its perpetual self-denial (οὐχ ἑαυτῷ ἡρεσεν, Romans xv. 3). One act of poverty, one act of benevolence, one act of self-denial!

Two great dangers in money-making and money-holding are signalized by our Lord in St. Luke's Gospel, and help to bring out this Leading Idea.

1. The first great danger is the unresting and feverish absorption to which it leads.

When the man died who in the present generation had amassed the largest fortune which was ever made by advertisement of a popular medicine—leaving, it is to be added, a vast sum for public purposes—the chief organ of contemporary opinion printed a striking article upon the entire singleness of aim necessary for money-making on a grand scale.²

¹ Glad to be poor, because He loved the poor,
And made them wealthy with His word.

SIR E. ARNOLD, The Light of the World, p. 170.

² "Money-making is an art by itself; it demands for success the devotion of the whole man. Sleeping or waking his thoughts

With that article we may well compare the utterance of one of the most simple and transparent of human souls—

Bear me, dear Lord ! where'er Thou art—
O never then from me depart ;
For to my soul 'tis hell to be
But for one moment without Thee.¹

There is something terrible in this metallization of spirit required by the process prescribed in the organ of the wisdom of the world. A wall so crowded can have no room for the image of Christ.

2. A second danger is deterioration of character. The soul becomes vulgarized. A want of consideration and sympathy disennobles the whole nature. Not seldom one who has been conspicuous for liberality in narrow circumstances becomes ungenerous, when suddenly transplanted into opulence. An offensive ostentation and sense of personal importance betrays itself in little traits of language which reveal character. To use vulgar but expressive words, such persons "stink of money."² must be devoted to it. . . . It was the life-work of a man who let no chances pass him. . . . It is not every one who is capable of such single-hearted attention as this. Most men wish to be wealthy, but . . . with a want of steadiness and singleness of purpose. . . . Politics or love are great things to them ; they are not willing to give them up as just so many snares by which the path of money-making is beset."—(Times article on Mr. Holloway.)

¹ Bishop Ken.

² What a pompous sense of personal importance in the words of the Pharisee—πάντα ὅσα κτῶμαι ! (St. Luke xviii. 12.) The Pharisees, as a class, were rich and covetous.

This selfish, feverish restlessness is drawn in deathless and terrible lines by our Lord in an awful parable peculiar to this Gospel. The rich man, just before a death of violence,¹ held that dread dialogue in his own heart.² Seven futures, in rapid succession,³ to show that such satisfaction as riches can give is always in the distance—then six presents, and all selfish! “So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich for God.”⁴

III

Yet with all this annunciation of the dangers of riches, there is absolutely nothing in St. Luke's Gospel which tends to show that money or property is an unlawful thing for a Christian to hold.

No doubt some of its burning phrases have been ingeniously formed into a theory which would land the Gospel in an exploded absurdity. “Luke,” it is said, “is an Ebionite.”⁵ This strain was certainly

¹ xii. 20. “This night they are requiring thy soul from thee.” The brigandage which was the terror of Galilee (Joseph. Antq. xvii. x. 4, Vita II) throws a lurid light upon the expression. (See Renan, Vie de Jésus. P. 174, n. 6.)

² διελογίζετο ἐν ἑαυτῷ, xii. 17.

³ τί ποιήσω—ποῦ συνάξω—τοῦτο ποιήσω—καθελῶ οἰκοδομήσω—συνάξω—ἐρῶ. Ibid. ver. 17–19. Then ἔχεις—κείμενα—ἀναπαύου, φάγε, πίε, εὐφραίνου, ver. 19. Note the repeated personal pronoun τοὺς καρπούς μου—μου τὰς ἀποθήκας—τὰ γεννήματά μου καὶ τὰ ἀγαθὰ μου—τῇ ψυχῇ μου. ver. 17–19.

⁴ Ibid. ver. 21.

⁵ So de Wette somewhere speaks of the “heresy of Luke.”

in the original teaching of Christ. The traits even in Matthew are significant enough. But Luke, who held advanced communistic views, exaggerated the original. He wished to represent the Saviour as insisting that the poor, simply because they were poor, were invited to the banquet of the kingdom ; that the rich man was to be cast into hell, simply because he was rich, well clothed, and dined well.”¹

The answer is obvious.

1. Our Lord very clearly shows that that which is really dangerous in riches extends to the poor as well as to the rich.

There are two words rendered covetous in A. V. . . . One is simply “love of money.”² The other word is more profound and far-reaching.³ It is the desire of more and ever more—moreness, if we might coin a word. It is the craving to fill the chasm in the self with lower things ; it is the character of one who is ever seeking more of them.⁴

¹ Renan, Vie de Jésus. Chap. x., xi. pp. 164-194. See Note A at the end of this Discussion.

² The adjective φιλάργυρος occurs only once in the Gospels. (St. Luke xvi. 14.)

³ Πλεονεξία. (St. Luke xii. 15.)

⁴ Hence its connection with lasciviousness. I Corinthians v. 11. Ephesians v. 3.

The cloyed will,
That satiate yet unsatisfied desire, that tub
Both filled and running.

Cymbeline, Act i. Sc. 7.

It is clear that the disciples did not look upon our Lord's words to the rich young man as extending spiritually only to the rich. Their alarmed question is not "what rich man can be saved?" but "then who can be saved?" when they receive the loving explanation—"Children, how hard is it for them that trust in riches to enter into the Kingdom of God!" And this proves that they understood the saying, and are accordingly soothed by being pointed to the miracle of grace which saves rich and poor alike from covetousness. What we need to be emancipated from is not money literally and in itself, but the fallacy about money and possessions common to man. "Take heed and guard yourselves from all covetousness—for, not in the abundance which belongs to any man, not out of the things which he possesseth, is his true and very life."¹

2. Our Lord teaches in St. Luke's Gospel that riches are not necessarily to be repudiated; so far from it, that rightly used they may add intensity to the joy of our future condition. Out of the mammon, whose characteristic is injustice and

Cf. Juvenal's—

"Lassata viris, nedum satiata, recessit."

On πλεονεξία, φιλαργυρία, see the few pregnant pages, full of the quiet reverential acuteness of Archbishop Trench, (Synon. of the New Testament, § 24, pp. 78-81.)

¹ οὐκ ἐν τῷ περισσεύειν τινι ἡ ζωὴ αὐτοῦ ἐστὶν ἐκ τῶν ὑπαρχόντων αὐτῷ. (St. Luke xii. 15.) The whole of this precious section is peculiar to St. Luke.

untruth, we may form friendships which will not terminate with life. "I say unto you"—not repudiate your riches, but—"make to yourselves friends out of the mammon of unrighteousness, that, when it shall fail, they may receive you into the eternal tabernacles."¹

Our Lord does not here teach that these friends purchase or gain for us an entrance; they simply receive us when we enter. Our names must be graven, not on the hearts of the poor saints, but on the hands of the Redeemer with the very nails of the crucifixion. "Make to yourselves friends." With money alone we can buy slaves, tools, flatterers. But with money alone we cannot buy a friend. Only he who has a heart can win a heart; only a heart-winner can be a friend-winner.

Riches rightly used, our Lord teaches, may be profitable for our higher interests.

3. Further. The true mind of Scripture is not in fragmentary texts splintered off from their context and crudely interpreted out of the medium in which they have their vitality. Outside the context of the history of the Church isolated texts, broken from the pole, are like broken telegraph wires. Fanaticism runs like a ball of fire along these broken wires.

¹ St. Luke xvi. 9. Mammon is scarcely proved to have been a Semitic god answering to Greek Plutus. The idea seems gradually to have been hypostatized in common speech (like the "almighty dollar" in America. Cf. $\delta\upsilon\ \delta\ \theta\epsilon\delta\varsigma\ \eta\ \kappa\omicron\iota\lambda\acute{\iota}\alpha$. Philippians iii. 19). The word is probably connected with the Hebrew יָמֵן = that in which confidence is placed. (Does our Lord refer to this in St. Mark x. 24?)

From the third Gospel we naturally proceed to the Church history by the same hand which is its sequel. The only communism of which we read, if ever realised at all as a fact, was only momentary. The history of Pentecost is not "a charter of sans-culottes." The communism which it records was the Christian communism of the spirit, which is ideal: the divine delicacy and tenderness of sentiment, of heart and hand. The worldling's harsh and repeated assertion—"this is my private property, this is my own"—was scarcely translated by a single believer¹ into the new and beautiful language of heaven, in that atmosphere still electric with the presence of Christ, and marked by the traces of the Holy Ghost's steps of fire. A little later the Christians of Antioch sent relief unto the brethren that dwelt in Judæa, whose worldly means, perhaps, had been affected by the noble extravagance of Christian love.² A large contribution necessarily implies resources from which it can be given. Later on, again, a house of considerable size remains the property of its owner.³

¹ καὶ οὐθὲ ἐῖς τι τῶν ὑπαρχόντων αὐτῷ ἔλεγεν ἴδιον εἶναι. (Acts iv. 32.)

² Acts xi. 29, 30.

³ Acts xii. 12. St. Peter's language is express. "Whiles the land remained, did it not remain thine own? and, after it was sold, was it not in thy power?" (Acts v. 4.)

On passing into the catacombs, recent discoveries prove that the Christian faith had penetrated into the higher classes of Roman society much earlier than had been supposed. Before the end of the first century noble or royal names—Cæcili, Pomponii, Attici, Domitii—of high-born ladies and gentlemen, who had heard Apostles, or disciples of Apostles, are found in the crypts. The very walls and paintings on the stucco, with their finished and delicate arabesques, attest the opulence of the possessors. The Gospel, all quivering as it still was with a young life from contact with the Saviour and His disciples, had not startled those distinguished personages with any suspicion of communism.¹

From these three facts—(1) that our Lord plainly taught that the chief danger to every man, poor as well as rich, is in a false view and wrong use of money; (2) because money, rightly employed, is capable of bringing special spiritual blessings; (3) because the very earliest Church interpreted the Saviour's teaching in this sense—we conclude that there is no communism in this Leading Idea of St. Luke's Gospel.

¹ Les Catacombes de Rome; par Gaston Boissier. (Revue des Deux Mondes. Tom. lix. pp. 170-173.) It will be noticed that the language of the Apostle (1 Peter iii. 3, 4) presupposes an atmosphere such as is breathed by fashionable ladies, surrounded by the refinements of rank and luxury.

IV

Let us not, however, after all close by explaining away the thought which is placed at the head of this Discussion. Christ looks right over His contemporaries. He feels that His voice has infinite volume. He can throw it where He will. Across the gulf of time, His eye looks at each of us. The good Physician still understands each case as He did on earth. And we are so different, one from the other. For most of us there are the allowed sweetnesses and tender commonplaces of home. We ripen for the grave through slow changes, until a husband's withered hand is laid in a hand which is withered too, and the child's last kiss is imprinted upon a white brow. Such lives may not only be happy but holy. Yet at times the sentences of Jesus sound dim, awful, and half understood, down the corridor, when the door is opened for a moment. "Sell all that thou hast and come and follow Me." "If any man come to Me, and hate not his father and mother—yea, and his own life also, he cannot be My disciple. And whosoever shall not bear his cross, and come after Me, he cannot be My disciple."¹

But there are cases in which He sees something peculiar—the stuff of which heroism and martyr-

¹ St. Luke xiv. 26, 27.

dom is made; the marble from which His hand can form the saint. From the cricket-field, from the struggles of the river, from the gaiety of the ball-room, from fair homes with the sustained stateliness of their daily life, He calls His own. He Who is so gentle half breaks their very hearts, takes from them the life of their life, that He may set the broken heart in His own way, and teach it the sublime joy of sacrifice.

And for promises—"treasure in the heavens."¹ Does that seem indefinite? Do we distrust things that lie in such azure distances, in such mystic depths? Nay, something more. He adds—"in this time."² For those who "have left their own,"³ He seems to promise two things—a life ennobled, augmented, harmonized;⁴ ties less vivid and passionate, but perhaps of almost equal tenderness.⁵

That call came from house to house in the "Umbrian movement" of the thirteenth century, to St. Francis of Assisi, and many others. It may come to some who read these lines—"sell all that thou hast," and that instantly—talents, acquisitions, prospects, the intellect trained for and assured of success. "Distribute through and through," to the sick, to the ignorant, to the out-

¹ St. Luke xviii. 22.

² Ibid. ver. 30.

³ ἀφέντες τὰ ἴδια. Ibid. ver. 28. ✓

⁴ πολλαπλασίονα. Ibid. ver. 30.

⁵ Read the whole of ver. 30.

cast, to the heathen—earth's poorest ones in the eyes of the true children of the Kingdom of God. St. Luke's Leading Idea of the teaching of Jesus Christ preserves much that tells of the danger of riches, much of the compensations of poverty, much that strikes to life a race of chivalry, an army of knight-errants of the Cross ; while to every soul, in every case, He says, " Come, follow Me."

NOTE A

ONE part of this statement of M. Renan's should be quoted as a characteristic specimen of his controversial method. The prophets established the closest relation between the words for "rich, impious, violent, wicked"; and on the other hand, between the words for "poor, gentle, humble, pious." See the Hebrew dictionaries in general, under the words—אביון, דל, עני, ענו, חסיד, עשיר, הוללים, עריץ.

M. Renan makes this remark apparently as an argument to prove that the Hebrew language was charged and saturated by the prophets with materials which could only end in such passionate exaggerations as those of St. Luke's Gospel. It is his doctrine that "language being for a race the very form of thought, the continued use of one language becomes for the people which is locked up in it a mould, a sort of strait-waistcoat."

"The prophets," he writes, "as true Tribunes, and, in one sense, the boldest of Tribunes," had established the closest relations between two classes of words. The "rich," in a transferred sense, = the violent, the wicked, and impious. The "poor" = the gentle, the humble, and pious. He adduces the words which follow to establish his assertion, and "refers us to the dictionaries."¹

To the dictionaries let us go.

1. אָבִיּוֹן.—This = the pious unrighteously oppressed. (Adjective, masculine nominasc. But the root is not poverty, but oppression (probably from אָבָה = to bend or be bowed), i. e. it is essentially the oppressed man, secondarily the poor man).

2. דָּל.—Is there any ground for attributing the conception of moral excellence to the דָּל? It appears to imply misery, not necessarily virtue. (Psalm lxxxii. 3; cxiii. 7.)

¹ Vie de Jésus, pp. 180, 181, n. 1.

3. עָנִי.—This word no doubt = pious man (Psalm xxxiv. 6). But its idea is linked with the spiritualising effect of affliction rather than of poverty in particular.

4. עָנָו.—The notion is depression, submission, not specially poverty.

5. חָסִיד.—Kind, pious. But the word seems not to have the most remote connection with poverty in any shape. The root is חָסַד = eager, ardently desirous. The חָסִידִים came to = the Maccabean worshippers of God. (The Ἀσιδαῖοι. Maccab. ii. 42, &c.)

6. עֲשִׂיר.—This word comes from עָשַׁר, to become rich, to be happy (as beatus in Latin). But if it has a bad moral sense (Proverbs xviii. 23) it is susceptible of a sense morally indifferent (Proverbs xxii. 7) or good (Proverbs xxii. 7).

7. הוֹלָלִים.—This word has the idea of ostentatious, noisy, arrogance—from הָלַל. This is a transfer of sensuous impressions to describe moral attributes (like “loud” in modern English). Psalm lxxiii. 3; lxxv. 4.

8. עֲרִיץ = Power as an object of terror to the weak.

Thus, eight Hebrew words are quoted to justify the assertion that the Hebrew language establishes the strictest relation between poverty and piety, riches and impiety; and we are referred to the “Hebrew dictionaries generally” under these eight heads. But upon inquiry it appears that of only two can the assertion be considered true in any sense; nor of any one of the words expressive of the rich is it absolutely true.

The language, then, had not been moulded into a dialect of communism by the Hebrew prophets; nor did it act as an excitant to our Lord’s teaching upon the subject of riches and poverty. The Hebrew tongue was not a magazine of socialistic explosives, sure to go off one day or other at the touch of a sans-culotte enthusiast of genius.

V

THE LEADING IDEAS OF ST. JOHN'S GOSPEL

A

THE DIVINE GLORY OF CHRIST IN THE INCARNATION ; THE SPIRITUAL ESSENCE OF THE MIRACLES, THE DISCOURSES, THE SACRAMENTS

“The Word was God, and the Word became flesh.”—ST. JOHN
i. 1-14.

I. THE opening sentence of each of the synoptics corresponds to the “standpoint” from which he views the earthly life of the Redeemer. St. Matthew begins with a genealogy which marks out Jesus Christ as the child of promise and prophecy ; the son of Abraham and heir of David. St. Mark’s Gospel is the development of the title in the first verse—“Son of God.” St. Luke at once professes that he writes with historical accuracy, and, when necessary, preserving the order of events.

The idea of the Prologue of St. John's Gospel is the Divine glory of Christ in the Incarnation.

A great life—a life whose words and works influence mankind profoundly—is not sufficiently told by merely relating its facts and dates. What an enigma, for instance, is the life of Napoleon! How many of his biographies are mere masks concealing those bronze features! We cannot understand any great and complicated life, good or evil, by merely recording the isolated events along which it moved. It is an organic whole, and must be reconstructed as such. That it is so with the life of Christ is confessed alike by Christians and by infidels. "In histories of this kind," says Renan, "the great sign that we possess the truth is to succeed in combining the incidents, so as to constitute a logical and probable whole. What we have to recover is not the material circumstance which has passed beyond our control; it is the very soul of the history. A great life cannot be rendered by a simple agglomeration of facts. A profound sentiment of its subject must embrace all, and bind it into unity." And the great Christian philosopher of the Middle Ages reminds us that a true Christology is the first and primary condition of a true theology.¹

¹ "Circa quod, primum considerandum occurrit de ipso Salvatore."

This, then, is the great Leading Idea of St. John's Gospel. Given the facts of Christ's life, how shall we bind them into unity, and read them as a whole? What theory of His Person and Nature will give us a logical and consistent view?¹ We may not believe that the alleged facts are historical—but if we do so believe, how can we reconcile them? For, in this very Gospel we meet with contradictory facts. On the one hand, the peasant guest called to the marriage feast; on the other, the Divine giver of wine. On the one hand, the weariness by the wayside well on the hot September day; on the other, the sublime self-consciousness of Him who said—"if any man thirst, let him come unto Me, and drink." On the one hand, the thorny crown, and the form that elicited from Pilate the words of pity as well as admiration—"behold! the Man;" on the other, the majesty of the body which cannot be marred, which has between it and harm the great deep of type and promise—"a bone of Him shall not be broken.”¹ Such are some of the antitheses of the great life, so nobly summed up by Keble :— “Lo! He comes,

¹ The word theory may, of course, lead to grave misapprehension. A life written from a theory, or point of view, may become an essay in which metaphysics supersede history, a panegyric, a romance, a prose-poem, a mystic effusion. In modern language it may be an ideological treatise. And it is said that the fourth Gospel does, as if upon principle, subordinate historical sequence to the necessity imposed by the theory of the Word. For proof that indifference to historical veracity and its principles is the last charge which can be sustained against St. John as an historian, the writer ventures to refer to his Epistles of St. John (pp. 88-98).

Hungry, thirsty, homeless, cold,—
Hungry, by whom saints are fed
With the eternal living bread ;
Thirsty, from whose pierced side
Living waters spring and glide ;
Cold and bare He comes, Who never
Can put off His robe of light—
Homeless, Who must dwell for ever
In the Father’s bosom bright.”

In the Prologue to St. John’s Gospel we have an answer to the questions suggested, a principle by which we may harmonize the facts of that life. St. John gives us a key which proves itself by fitting into all the wards of the lock. What Christ did and said becomes explicable only by knowing what Christ is.

Of the title—the Word—we remark that it unites two lines of thought—one scriptural, the other metaphysical. In Genesis, in the Psalms, in Proverbs and Isaiah, the Word or Wisdom of God seems, with increasing clearness, to be made personal, and connected with the Divine Angel. But further, the inspired thinker looks into the depths of his own mind, into the phenomena of thought and language. In the first he finds a faint type of the ontological relation between the Father and Son ; in the second an illustration of the Incarnation.¹ By this great metaphysical conception (admired by Maine de Biran as sincerely as by Augustine), Scripture is illustrated in its depths. The Logos of Philo, abstract and impersonal, a mere Platonic ideal according to which God works, can only confuse us in dwelling on the Logos of John, who is a Personal self-existent Being.² The Son is the Word, because He has His Being from the Father. As a word is the formed utterance of the speaker's thought, He is the Word that the Father has outspoken into separate Personal Existence from the fulness of His Being.

¹ St. John ii. 1–11 ; iv. 7 ; cf. vii. 37 ; xix. 2, 5, 37 ; cf. Exodus xii. 46 ; Psalm xxxiv. 20.

Some who have not lost all reverence for Christianity speak as if St. John's Prologue added a

¹ See Döllinger, First Age of the Church, i. 235 sqq.; Bull, Def. Fid.

² The Word in St. John is opposed

(a) To the Gnostic Word, created and temporal.	}	as	{	(a) Uncreated and eternal. "In the beginning was the Word."
(b) To the Platonic Word, ideal and abstract.				(b) Personal and Divine. "The Word was God, He, His."
(c) To the Judaistic and Philonic Word, the type and idea of God in Creation.	}	as	{	(c) Creative and Cause. "All things were made by Him."
(d) To the Dualistic Word, limitedly and par- tially instrumental in Crea- tion.				(d) Unique and universally Creative. "Without Him was not anything made that hath been made."
(e) To the Doketic Word, impalpable and visionary.	}	as	{	(e) Real and permanent. "The Word became flesh."

difficulty for faith ; as if St. Matthew or St. Luke on the Incarnation were comparatively easy to receive. Is it so for those who think ? Place side by side these statements. On the one side—"when as His mother, Mary, was espoused to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost." On the other side those four oracular propositions—"in the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. And the Word was made flesh." Which is easier to receive ? There have been profound intellects who have confessed that the statement in St. Matthew almost repelled them. But every fact has its factual and its ideal aspect.¹ In St. John the fact of the Incarnation is lifted up and flooded with the light of a Divine idea. If, in the Unity of the Divine existence, there be a Trinity of Persons ; if the Second Person of that Trinity is to assume the reality of flesh, and the likeness of sinful flesh ; we can, in some measure, see why He needed the tabernacle of a body, framed and moulded by the Eternal Spirit to be His fitting habitation. The mystery of a Virgin-Mother is the correlative of the mystery of the Word made flesh.

II. If we pass from this architectonic and presiding conception—to which St. John owes his title of Theologus, and his emblem of the eagle—we may conveniently trace the Leading Ideas of the spiritual Gospel under four heads—the miracles, the discourses, the sacraments, and the delineations of character recorded in it.

¹ Dr. Whewell. Inductive Philosophy.

1. What is the Leading Idea in the miracles of St. John's Gospel?

The synoptical Gospels are full of miracles. The air is thick with them. It may be said that they are chiefly regarded as manifestations of Christ's power or evidences of His mission.

Now St. John, in his Gospel, certainly lays much stress upon the argument from miracles. Nowhere else is there a more frequent appeal to their weight as evidences. It is the Saviour's own assertion—"the works that I do bear witness of Me, that the Father hath sent Me."¹ Yet in no Gospel are so few special miracles recorded. The turning of the water into wine; the healing of the nobleman's son, and of the impotent man at Bethesda; the feeding of the five thousand, and the walking upon the waters; the hiding Himself, not as a timid man crouching behind the pillars of the Temple, but as God hides Himself in nature; the restoration to sight of the blind man; the resurrection of Lazarus; the going back and falling to the ground of the band who came to arrest Jesus; and the miraculous draught of fishes after the Resurrection, exhaust the list.¹ How are we to account for this?

¹ "The works which the Father hath given Me to accomplish; the very works that I do, bear witness of Me that the Father hath sent Me." St. John v. 36.

There can be no rational doubt that St. John presupposes an acquaintance with, and so far bears witness to, the earlier evangelists. But there is another reason.

One miracle of each class is recorded, except that of which we read so much in St. Mark—the dispossession of demoniacs. Not that this last was foreign to his circle of ideas. He includes it in that triumphant sentence of his epistle—"for this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that He might destroy the works of the devil."² Indeed, it may be said without exaggeration that the notion of moral possession is peculiarly Joannic. "One of you is a devil. Ye are of your father, the devil. The devil having now put into the heart of Judas to betray Him. After the sop Satan entered into him."³ But the one miracle of each class recorded by him is a type, a sacramental action, an "acted parable," a golden ray streaming out from His presence and opening up a line of light far into the kingdom of God. Some are so interpreted by the Saviour Himself. For instance, the feeding of the five thousand leads to the great discourse concerning the bread of Life. The restoration of sight

¹ St. John ii. 1, 11; iv. 46, 54; v. 5 sqq.; vi. 5, 21; viii. 59; ix. 1, 41; xi. 1, 44; xviii. 6; xxi. 1, 11.

² St. John iii. 8.

³ St. John vi. 70; viii. 44; xiii. 2, 27.

to the blind man teaches that He can couch the diseased eye of the soul, and let in the light upon "the unlit gulf of ourselves."¹ In other miracles, men, the least inclined to mysticism, have discovered a meaning of the kind. Thus Copleston and Whately² agree with Augustine in seeing more than meets the eye in the wine of Cana. It is a type and image of all the work of Jesus. In the Bible the Law passes by His word, into something grander, richer, at once sweeter and stronger. In our lives the world gives its best wine first; first romance and excitement, then the pleasure palling upon the jaded palate, and the wine of life upon the bitter and poisonous lees. But Christ reserves for His own grace upon grace, until, when the banquet is over, and the sacramental wine touches

¹ St. John ix. 39.

² Bishop Copleston's Sermon on the Marriage in Cana was published, along with several others, by Archbishop Whately in 1854, in a volume entitled Remains of the Late Edward Copleston, D.D., &c. (J. W. Parker, West Strand, London). It is the eleventh sermon in the collection. The Archbishop's note to it is:—

"There is something remarkable in the history of this sermon. The main substance of it had been stated to me by a friend who had been struck with a sermon he had heard in which this view was taken. I repeated this to Dr. Copleston, who was so much struck with it that he thereupon composed the following discourse, which I heard him preach for the first time. From recollection of this, I afterwards myself wrote a sermon, which has since been published."

The late eminent (Dr. Fitzgerald) Bishop of Killaloe, was good enough to furnish the writer with the information contained in this note; he believed the original of this chain of sermons to have been one by Saurin.

the lips for the last time, they can say to the Bridegroom of the Church—"Thou hast kept the good wine until now." Few Christians, indeed, would have much sympathy with the German Professor of Theology,¹ who when Augustine finds in the raising of Jairus's daughter, the widow of Nain's son, and Lazarus, the types of sinners variously dead in sin but quickened to the life of righteousness, accuses him of "trifling, ingenious perhaps, and pretty enough, but equally unworthy of the dignity of criticism and of the sanctity of Scripture."

On the whole, it may be said that the miracles in the synoptics teach as well as prove, and that those in St. John prove as well as teach. But the main idea of the miracles in the three is to prove, while the main idea of the miracles specially recorded by St. John is to teach. To these especially are the words of Augustine applicable—"what our Lord did corporeally, He would have understood spiritually. For He did not merely work miracles for the miracle's sake, but that the things which He wrought might be true to those who could understand them, as well as marvellous to those who beheld them. Our Lord worked miracles, to signify somewhat by those miracles, and that we should learn something more from them than simply that they were great, wonderful, and divine.”¹

¹ Clausen. Augustinus S. Scripture Interpres. (p. 153). Clausen gives some indication that the deeper view of the miracle of Cana would meet with his condemnation as solemn trifling. (p. 240.)

The miracles in St. John, then, are viewed sacramentally and ideally.

2. The discourses of Jesus preserved in St. John.

The synoptical Gospels are full of parables. “It is above all, in parables,” says Renan, “that the Master excelled. Nothing in Judaism had given Him the model of these exquisite pieces. He created it.” An eloquent historian of the Church² writes—“Born in the ranks of the people, leading the public life so common under an Eastern sky, He addressed the multitude. When He was seen far off on the border of the lake, the masses gathered to hear from Him words at once sweet and strong, majestic and familiar; in the delivery of which He alternately pierced the soul with barbs of fire, and charmed the imagination by the touching grace of His parables.” So characteristic of Him was this teaching, that St. Matthew applies to it the language of Asaph in the seventy-eighth psalm—“without a parable spake He not unto them, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, saying, I will open My mouth in parables; I will utter things which have been kept secret from the foundation of the world.”³

¹ Tractatus in Ioan. ad init.

² M. Albert de Broglie. Hist. de l'Eglise. Tom. i., ad init.

³ St. Matthew xiii. 34, 35; Psalm lxxviii. 2.

With this characteristic of our Lord's teaching in the synoptics before us, it is, perhaps, somewhat startling for a simple Christian to be reminded—as he sometimes is, in no subdued tone—that in St. John no complete and regular parable is preserved. Indeed, only two pieces with much external resemblance to the parables of the synoptics are to be found in the fourth Gospel—the comparison of the Good Shepherd, and that of the Vine.¹ Nay, the very word does not occur; for the term translated parable in our versions is in the original different.² Does truth, then, compel us to say to the reflective student—you must make your choice sharply? If you are a Christian, you must sacrifice a beautiful delusion to Him who will not be served by a lie. If your Lord spoke as Matthew reports, He did not and could not have spoken as John reports. You must surrender either Him who said, "I will give you rest," or Him who said, "I am the Resurrection and the Life"—either the Jesus of the synoptics, or the Jesus of John. A little consideration removes the difficulty.³

¹ St. John x. 1-6, 11-17; xv. 1-9.

² παραβολα. St. John x. 6; xvi. 25-29.

³ It has been conjectured that in His more public addresses at Jerusalem, our Lord may have used the common-dialect Greek instead of Aramean, for hearers whose circumstances had made them lose their Hebrew. But parables almost exacted a Hebrew investiture of language for their first oral utterance.

(a) The circumstances under which the discourses of Jesus in this Gospel were delivered are different from those in which the discourses in the synoptics occur. Every prudent teacher adapts himself to the taste and capacity of his audience. Indeed, the danger is that this complaisance should be carried too far. But there is an adaptation not unbecoming the wise and good. The gentle strain of teaching which breathes of flowers and birds, the mountain and the lake, is not suitable to bigoted theologians and atrabilious devotees living on the arid and stony soil of Jerusalem. The Great Bishop and Shepherd of souls reasons with Nicodemus, or with the Pharisees, in a strain very different from that which He adopts to the Galileans.

(b) Again; we find in this Gospel more words addressed to His own. Parables were not so fitting for continued instruction, addressed to those who were to go forth from His Presence to teach the world. Read the chapters from the fourteenth to the seventeenth. Those divine deeps with human emotions quivering on them like light upon the surface of the sea, that soliloquy of the High Priest, pleading with His Father, are absolutely peculiar to this Gospel, absolutely unique. Is it strange that the language which expresses them should be unique also?

(c) But, finally, if we have not parables in St. John, have we not evidence in the words of Jesus there, of the tone of thought, which, under fitting circumstances, would create parables? What are the comparisons of the Shepherd and the Vine but parables in germ? Note how outward things are handled by the Master; with what associations He invests the water of the well, the bread with which He feeds the people, the light that falls upon the Temple at dawn, the grain of wheat, the vine, the sheep.¹ From what manner of mind should we expect parables? Surely from that to which nature is transparent, which in the noble words written by Southey for the monument of Butler, finds "in outward and visible things the type and evidence of those within the veil." If, then, in St. John's Gospel we find no parables expanded, we find a number of parables compressed.²

This seems to be a natural place for noticing one objection which has been confidently made against the historical truth of the Gospel. This objection is based upon the undeniable likeness between the language of our Lord in the Gospel, and that of St. John in his Epistles. Are we to

1

"The things of earth

Are copies of the things in heaven, more close,
More clear, more near, more intricately linked,
More subtly, than men guess. Mysterious—
Finger on lip—whispering to wistful ears,
Nature doth shadow spirit."

SIR E. ARNOLD, The Light of the World, p. 171.

² St. John iv. 14; vi. 32-35 sqq.; ix. 5; xii. 24; xv. 1-9; x. 1-17.

admit that we are forced to trace "the monotonous tone" of John's own style in the discourses, which can, therefore, lay no claim to historical accuracy? There are reasons which enable us to answer this question in the negative.

(a) The likeness between the style of the discourses and that of St. John is somewhat overstated.

The word Logos (which we meet in the Prologue of the Gospel, in the first Epistle, and in the Apocalypse¹) is not applied by Jesus to Himself in any passage of His discourses. Hengstenberg argues, and apparently with reason, that light and darkness are used with different intentions in the Epistle and Gospel; signifying in the Gospel the region of salvation, and the awful tract beyond; in the Epistle moral good and evil. The doctrine of propitiation and purification by the blood of Christ is stated with less reserve in the Epistle than in our Lord's teaching in the Gospel.²

There are other differences for an attentive student, which belong to deeper characteristics of thought and style. He who has made an attempt really to master the Epistle of St. John, will have been struck by two peculiarities. (1) As we read, we find a collection of apparently isolated divine

¹ St. John i. 1-15; 1 St. John i. 1; Apoc. i. 2; xix. 13.

² Cf. 1 St. John i. 7, with St. John iii. 16.

γνῶμαι, of sentences generally short, and almost lapidary, in their strong simple incisiveness. These sentences superficially seem to be quite disconnected. Yet a connection there is, spiritual rather than logical, ethical more than intellectual, real not verbal. (2) A second characteristic is that, in passage after passage, the eagle of God seems to wheel round and round favourite thoughts. But it will be found that there is a perpetual line of advance, not mere spiral revolution. There is parallelism; but not the "mere monotonous parallelism, the cycloidal composition and eternal tautology," with which the expression of Hebrew thought has been charged by Herder. It is a parallelism, or oppositio cum accessione, as critics have expressed it.¹ To take one instance out of many. "He that hateth his brother is in darkness even until now." Then—"he that hateth his brother is in darkness." Now note the accession to the parallelism, giving a solemn eloquence to the close of the verse, "he is in darkness," his inward condition—"and walketh in darkness," his outward life—"and knoweth not whither he goeth," to what unsuspected guilt, to what unsurmised punishment. Something worse still—worse than darkness around, above, within. "The darkness blinded him once for all; he has lost the very faculty of sight."²

¹ See Reiche, Comment. Criticus, tom. iii. in loc.

² ἐτύφλωσε. I St. John ii, 9, 10, 11.

It may be asserted that neither of these peculiarities is anything like so marked in the discourses of our Lord in the Gospel.

(b) The opening words of the first Epistle show us that St. John would have found an insuperable moral objection to placing discourses in the mouth of Jesus. "That which was from the beginning, which we have heard,"¹ This at once recalls to us, the words of Jesus, more especially His discourses in St. John's Gospel. The very place of this clause in the sentence, where hearing stands out above sight and handling, shows us the reverence with which he regarded the words of the eternal Word. It shows us that he would have shrunk from the profanity of turning his Gospel into a fiction or a drama, and inventing language for the Incarnate Wisdom of God.

(c) But, if the similarity between the style of the discourses and that of the Epistle is exaggerated by many, it is, at least, after all deductions, very remarkable. And, if we reject with indignation, on behalf of the Apostle, the supposition that he would invent language, and place it in the lips of his Master; can we find a satisfactory solution of the difficulty?

Assuredly we can.

Christ, in the days of His flesh, expressed His divine knowledge in words. In His teaching there were two elements, referred to by Himself in the antithesis—"if I have told you of earthly things . . . if I tell you of heavenly things."¹ "Earthly and heavenly" is not equivalent to easy and difficult. But "heavenly" comprises dogmatic objective truths, connected with the nature of God, and the counsels of His grace. "Earthly," again, assuredly does not mean earth-born or carnal.² To that soul whose home was beyond the stars, in the bosom of God, things which seem to us the most heavenly, are on earth after all.³ They are of heaven indeed, from heaven, even now, on the line which seems to blend with the heaven beyond.⁴ But they have for their subject-matter the teaching of truth, not as it is in itself, but as it meets with a creature like man, as it is capable of being morally tested and experienced by us. Others, then, recorded those words, which rather belonged to the circle of "the things on earth," or which made a greater impression at the time of their delivery. The Sermon on the Mount, spoken upon a height in Galilee to a great assemblage, sank into a thousand hearts, and found its way into the earliest memoirs. The conversation with Nicodemus by night, the dialogue

¹ 1 St. John i. 1.

¹ St. John iii. 12.

² The word is ἐπίγεια, not γήινα.

³ ἐπίγεια.

⁴ "In margine cœli."

BENG. in loc.

with the Samaritan woman, the discourse in the Temple, would not lie so near the surface of Christian recollection.

Of these two elements, then, in the teaching of Christ, there was one with which the mind of St. John had a constitutional affinity. He appropriated "the heavenly things." They sank into his soul. They were taken up into the substance of his intellectual and spiritual being. Those who have been much with the great masters of thought and language, though only through the medium of their books, show by their words and ideas the high company which they have been keeping. Tennyson, Browning, and Arnold impose the very faults of their diction upon a generation of poetasters. A very thoughtful theologian wrote:—"I trace so distinctly to Bishop Butler the origin of the soundest and clearest views that I possess upon the human mind, that I could not write upon this, or any kindred subject, without a consciousness that I was directly or indirectly borrowing largely from him."¹ Common studies and schools and tutors impress subtle similarities of literary form and colour. Modern Oxford men are liable to sudden conversions, and are drifted to havens upon the most distant shores of thought. But there is the old trick of voice. "Cœlum non animum mutant."

¹ Bishop O'Brien, Preface to Two Sermons upon the Human Nature of our Lord.

The autobiography of the Oxford politician has, curiously, likenesses to the Apologia of the Oxford Oratorian. But much more is this the case, where the charm of personal influence is added. "I may be allowed," says an eloquent writer, "to take this opportunity of claiming, once for all, for the pupils of Arnold, the privilege and pleasure of using his words, and adopting his thoughts, without the necessity of specifying, in every instance, the source from which they have been derived."¹ Those who, nearly half a century ago, on Sunday afternoons used to listen with spell-bound interest to the calm, sweet voice of the remarkable man who was then Vicar of St. Mary's; who told us of —"his misery's signs,

And how the dying spark of hope was fed,
And how the heart was soothed, and how the head;
And all his hourly varied anodynes"— will sometimes find a phrase, a word, a sentence coming to their lips or falling from their pen—or hear them in the sermons, and recognize them in the writings of others, which they can trace to a teacher, from whom they are now separated by a vast space of the spiritual world.

We have freely used analogies, drawn from our own days, and from men not long since living, because they may enable us to feel more vividly how probable it is that the style of St. John should be like that of the discourses in the Gospel. Remember that the disciple was John, and the Master Jesus. Those favourite words—"light and darkness, life and death, love and hate, truth and lie, world and abiding"—were not terms which he had taught himself to apply to the designation of his own ideas. He had heard them in the long golden hush of the summer evenings by the shore of the Lake of Galilee; in the sorrow of the guest-chamber; between the brook of Kedron and the garden of the Agony; during the days when the Risen Lord spoke to them "of the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God." He had not only enshrined them in his memory. He had made them so livingly his own, had appropriated them so profoundly, that he could use them with unerring precision and definiteness. Expressions which occur in the Gospel historically and occasionally were taken into the Apostle's soul. No longer as it were in block, but rounded and smoothed like stones by the continual friction of the water, they appear in the Epistles, in a sententious, aphoristic form. "Is it John, the son of Zebedee," it has been asked, "who could write these lessons of abstract metaphysics, to which neither the synoptics nor the Talmud present any analogy?" Certainly, for he had heard them from Christ. In once instance, at least, he shows that he knew words previously recorded in the synoptics. "Jesus Himself testified that a prophet hath no honour in his own country.”¹ Sometimes we can see that the thought latent in an expression in the synoptics, is present to him. “He spake of the Temple of His Body,”—“He dwelt among us,”² are but commentaries upon the sentence in St. Matthew—“there is something here greater than the Temple.”³ The synoptical Jesus teaches nothing, we are told, but morality,—the Joannic nothing but theology and metaphysics. What shall we say to such texts as these—“all things are delivered unto Me of My Father, and no man knoweth the Son but the Father, neither knoweth any man the Father save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal Him.” “If David call Him Lord, how is He his Son?” “I thank Thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth.”⁴ Have not these sentences of Jesus in the synoptics the same ring with the highest utterances in the spiritual evangelist?

¹ Dean Stanley. Preface to Essays on the Apostolic Age.

We may conclude without hesitation that John did not give language to Christ, but Christ to John.

3. We proceed to consider the Leading Idea of St. John's Gospel in the sacraments.

In the earlier evangelists their institution is re-

¹ St. John iv. 44. Cf. St. Matthew xiii. 57. St. Mark vi. 4. St. Luke iv. 24.

² ἐσκήνωσεν, St. John i. 14; ii. 21.

³ τοῦ ἱεροῦ μείζον ἐστίν ὧδε. St. Matthew xii. 6.

⁴ St. Matthew xi. 27; xxii. 45; St. Luke x. 21.

corded very fully. It is omitted in St. John. Why is this?

(a) It is true, and so far perfectly satisfactory, to answer that this Gospel was written considerably later than the others. The Church was fully organized. It enjoyed its weekly celebration. It knew of the institution of the Eucharist, not only from the three synoptics, but from the special revelation made to St. Paul.¹

(b) But the answer which it is the privilege of the Church's children to give, is deeper and more blessed than this, however valid it may be for apologetic purposes. St. John does treat of the sacraments.

Can we doubt it? The sacred history and ritual observances of the Jews, even ecclesiastical institutions of later date, are transfigured and glorified in this Gospel. Jacob's ladder, the Temple, the serpent in the wilderness, the manna, the Paschal lamb, the beautiful ceremonial of drawing water in golden pitchers from the fountain of Siloam at the Feast of Tabernacles in remembrance of the water gushing from the rock,—all these are spiritualised and idealised in St. John's Gospel.²

And again, the Apostle's heart is so full of sacraments, that in his Epistle he treats them with a mysticism, which is not dark to those who love. "There are Three that bear witness, the Spirit, and the Water, and the Blood."¹ Of these Three the Gospel is full, section after section. John speaks of a trinity of testimony on earth, the three "genuine witnesses,"² "the shadow of the Blessed Trinity in heaven" of which he thought, but—so far as our evidence extends—did not write. And what is that testimony? "The water"—and the water of which the faithful know is that for the mystical washing away of sin. "The blood"—the Atonement, and the cup by whose wine we are partakers of it. "The Spirit"—the one Baptizer, the one Consecrator, for "by one Spirit we are all baptized into one body, and have all been made to drink into one Spirit."³ With these considerations before us, we shall not rob the Gospel of St. John of its sacramental jewels. The words of Jesus in the third of St. John, addressed to an age full of baptismal ideas, can have but one meaning. No critical ingenuity, no "licentious alchemy" of interpretation can ever prove that water and the Spirit are equivalent to the Spirit without the water. So with the sixth chapter. There may be, and there are, objections to making our Lord's discourse there exclusively sacramental. But to sever it from the sacrament, to make it unsacramental, is contrary even to common sense. It is impossible that the Apostles should not have been reminded of it, when the Holy Communion was instituted. It is impossible not to think of the Eucharist, as we read it now. It has been said by the most evangelical of commentators, "that Jesus intentionally so framed His words, that—while they treated at once and for ever of the spiritual fruition—they yet fitted into the august mystery of the sacrament when it was ordained, and which He evidently had in His mind." ¹

¹ 1 Corinthians xi. 23.

² St. John i. 52; ii. 21; iii. 14, 15; vi. 49; vi. 32, 35; vii. 37, 40.

¹ 1 St. John v. 7, 8.

² Lightfoot. On Revision. P. 25.

³ 1 Corinthians xii. 13.

In this Gospel, then, St. John treats the sacraments as he has treated so many other things. He spiritualises nature, history, ritual, miracles. But to spiritualise is not to evaporate, to "subtilise into a metaphor." He spiritualises Baptism and the Eucharist. That is to say, he shows us their ideal side; he lights them up from above and from within.

We may put the same truth in another form by saying that Water is a Leading Idea of the fourth Gospel.

So long as St. John's Gospel lasts the water must "ever bear witness."² There is scarcely a paragraph of it where water is not mentioned, generally with some relation to Christ. The Jordan itself bears witness as it rolls that all its water cannot give that which is bestowed by Him who "was before" the Baptist. The water that was made wine testifies to His glory. The birth of "water and of the Spirit" is His witness, age after age. In section after section, we have the same Leading Idea. The water of Jacob's well,—of the pool of Bethesda; of the stormy lake upon which He walked, or outpoured at the Feast of Tabernacles; the water of Siloam; the water poured into the basin, when Jesus washed the disciples' feet; the water which flowed from the riven side upon the cross; the water of the Sea of Galilee, when Jesus showed Himself on its beach to the seven; as long as this is read in the Gospel, so long water must be recognized as one of its Leading Ideas.¹ Water, literal water, is everywhere. He loved it from the associations of his early life, and for the mention made of it by his Master.² And of all writers in the world, St. John is the least likely to have joined without necessity, an external and material object with the Spirit. Never would he have written—"except a man be born of water and of the Spirit"—unless Jesus had expressly joined the two. The

¹ Bengel.

² τρεῖς εἰσὶν οἱ μαρτυροῦντες...τὸ ὕδωρ. I St. John v. 7, 8.

¹ St. John i. 16, 19, 31, 33; ii. 9; iv. 46; iii. 5; iv. 5, 7, 11, 12; v. 1, 8; vi. 19; vii. 35, 37; ix. 7; xiii. 1, 14; xix. 34; xx. 1-8. It is interesting to note that water is constantly noted in the other great book which the Church believes to be from St. John. (Apoc. vii. 7; xiv. 7; xvi. 5; xxi. 6; xxii. 1-17.)

² See Neander. Life of Christ. P. 187.

inner meaning is that St. John's reverence for Baptism sanctified, in his estimation, all the waters of earth.¹ Even so, for the sake of the Eucharist, every vine was a hallowed type, and all bread a sacred thing.²

¹ Cf. μήτι τὸ ὕδωρ δύναται κωλυσαί τις. Acts x. 47. The writer ventures to refer to his Epistles of St. John. Pp. 28, 29, 226-228.

² The "tragic significance" (to use Lange's words) of the Jewish feasts in the life of our Lord is certainly a Leading Idea of St. John (ii. 13; v. 1; vi. 4; vii. 2, 37; x. 22; xi. 55; xiii. 1; xviii. 28, 39; xix. 31).

NOTE A

No thoughtful Christian can fail to have been struck by the fact that, except those few words which our Master "with His finger wrote upon the ground," He wrote nothing. He did not bow down over a table piled with manuscripts, and in hours of meditative thought during which He outwatched the stars erect a monument which might be admired by a succession of sages and critics. He did not write out the complete text of an elaborate system of theology. He went forth into the throng of men. He spoke by the highways and the lake-side, in words which, if they were high as heaven and deep as the transparent lake, were in form broad and popular. When we consider the analogy of the "tables that were the work of God," and of "the writing that was the writing of God," and the value of books in excluding error and securing permanence—we ask why did He not write? There is one reason, derived from His nature. In great books the truest element of greatness is the conviction that we can trace the pathway of a superior mind in pursuit of truth. When such a writer comes to the close of prolonged labours, he can utter his heureka—I have found the truth. He does not say—I have found the truth. He does say—"I am the Truth." We may answer the question why Jesus did not write, with the philosopher of the Middle Ages. The thought of Jesus is preserved in a diviner way, according to the great promise—"I will put my Law in their mind, and write it in their heart." That which was done by the members was virtually done by the Head. It will be seen that, in this sense, the Gospels themselves may be looked upon as part of His teaching.

Jesus wrote no book.—See Neander. Life of Christ, p. 104.

The whole question is well discussed by Thomas Aquinas.

“Summary.

“It might seem that Christ ought to have written : for—

“1. Writing is best for an immortal doctrine. St. Luke xxi. 33.

“2. The analogy of the Old Law. Deuteronomy xxiv. 1 ; xxxii. 16 ; xxxi. 18 ; xxiv. 12.

“3. More complete exclusion of error.

“4. Avoidance of misrepresentation. Some are wont to be surprised because the Lord Himself wrote nothing, so that we must believe others writing of Him. This is specially said by that class of Pagans, and of others, who will not openly blaspheme, and who allow Him surpassing wisdom, but simply as Man. They say that the disciples gave Him more than His due, so as to call Him God.

“Yet it is matter of fact that He wrote nothing.

“Answer.

“1. The more excellent mode suited the most excellent Teacher. Cf. St. Matthew v. i., vii. 28. The analogy of Pythagoras and of Socrates who wrote nothing.

“2. The most excellent doctrine cannot be cramped into books. Cf. St. John xxi. 25. (St. Augustine says—‘not that there would not be local room, but capacitate legentium comprehendi non posse.’)

“3. Due order through disciples to people. Mystical reference to Proverbs ix. 3.

“Again.

“1. What was done by the members was done by the Head. Qui facit per alium facit per se.

“2. The old law might be written, but 2 Corinthians iii. 3.

“3. Those who believed not Apostles would not have believed Christ.”

Cajetan adds some good thoughts, showing how this was more worthy of Christ’s divine glory.

“Christ teaches, like God, not by writing. Analogy of God’s mode of teaching natural things.

“Jeremiah xxxi. 33. He will prove His doctrine one of spirit and life, not of death and the letter. Christ, knowing that this internal teaching was reserved to Him as Lord, committed not His writing to paper, as if the doctrine must perish if the writing were lost, which He would preserve for ever by the inward light of His Spirit.”—D. THOMÆ. Summa Theolog. cum Comment. Cajetani. Quæst. xlii. art. iv. Tom. iv. f. 142.

Mr. Latham shows, with much vigour and clearness, what advantages ensue from the Gospels “being narrative instead of didactic, and coming from the evangelists instead of from Christ.” He also powerfully sets forth the evils which might have arisen from bondage to the letter. Pastor Pastorum. (Pp. 13, 14.)

V

THE LEADING IDEAS OF ST. JOHN'S GOSPEL

B

IN DELINEATION OF CHARACTERS; IN THE GROWTH OF BELIEF AND UNBELIEF; IN RECORDING WITNESS TO CHRIST

THE great Leading Idea of the fourth Gospel is the Divine glory of Christ in the Incarnation. It has, also, its own Leading Ideas about the miracles, the discourses, and the sacraments.

We proceed to consider other Leading Ideas.

I

In the delineations of character.¹ The profoundest thinkers, the most deeply reflective men, are not always the acutest observers, or the most judicious critics of individual character. Jesus alone both knew all men—the infinitely delicate traits which distinguished one from the other, the individual souls who crossed the pathway of His life on earth—and also “knew what was in man,” in our collective humanity.¹ St. John, “the Plato of the twelve,” as he has been called, appears to have been endowed with some reflection of the power to read men as well as man. As we pierce through the mists of the past; as we try to give form and features to those whose ideal lineaments we have seen so often on the painter’s canvas, or glorified by the sunshine in the cathedral-window; as we bring before us the Incarnate Lord, and the company by whom He was surrounded; we find that we owe yet more to St. John than even to St. Luke. The transparent simplicity of Nathanael; the noble humility of the Baptist; the sensual nature of the Samaritan woman; the rude bluntness of the blind man; the yearning of Philip; the logical touch, or by the course of the narrative, or by preserving some word of insight spoken by the Master. St. John lights up the life and character more dramatically by some word spoken at a critical time of a man’s life by himself, in some way containing a revelation of the inner being, of its attitude and purpose. St. Luke’s delineation of character is didactic, St. John’s dramatic. (St. Luke ii. 19–51; v. 9; vii. 47; x. 40; xi. 53, 54; xix. 2, 10; xxiii. 8–11. St. John i. 41–43, 49; iii. 2–4; cf. vii. 51; iv. 15, 19, 25; vi. 68, 69; ix. 36, 38; xi. 21–27; xii. 21; xiii. 9; xiv. 5 (cf. xi. 16—Thomas’s character self-painted in two sentences of his own); xii. 28.

¹ This is also a leading characteristic of St. Luke. [supra, iv. B. (a).] But the two evangelists produce their results by a different process. St. Luke describes the character by some delicate psycho-

¹ St. John ii. 24, 25.

passionate tenderness of Magdalene ; the weakness of the sceptical Pilate ; the contrasted characters of Judas Iscariot, of Peter and John, of the Judas who was not Iscariot ; the melancholy of Thomas, doubting just because he loves : all these we owe, wholly or in part, to St. John. One really cannot sympathise with those who complain of the perpetual iteration and monotony of St. John. When a man accuses the Alps or the ocean of monotony, we may fairly suspect that there is a deficiency in himself. But while each character is individually true, each also is a type of a class, with permanent and universal features.

High above all is the figure of the Saviour, as St. John would have us see it. The power of that representation may be faintly illustrated by comparing one portion of St. John's narrative with the device whereby a painter has striven to represent it. We turn to the discourse of the guest-chamber. A great artist wishes to combine the divine melancholy and divine peace ; the exquisitely blended joy and sorrow ; the majestic sweetness of the "peace I leave with you," with the reproachful sadness of "ye shall leave Me alone." But he finds that he has no materials by which he can present to us simultaneously the deepening shadow of the human anguish, and the fulness of the sustaining love. And so just above the Lord reclining at the table a window is opened ; and through it faintly and dimly are suggested rather than sketched Gethsemane, as it was an hour or two later—three sleeping forms and Another that kneels, and a winged shape flitting through the night towards the olives, with a cup in his hand.¹

We may, perhaps, best be able to bring out St. John's peculiar power of delineating character by directing our attention to his representation of the Baptist.

Before doing so we may just remind ourselves by a brief quotation from Eusebius that St. John refers to the synoptical books.² "After the fasting and temptation Matthew shows us the chronology of his book, saying—'now when Jesus had heard that John was cast into prison, He departed into Galilee.'" So Mark and Luke in the parallels.³ "It is said that on account of these things, the evangelist John, having been asked to relate in his Gospel the time passed over by the three former evangelists in silence, and the things done in it by the Saviour (i. e. the things before the imprisonment of the Baptist), gave his assent; first by writing—'this beginning of miracles did Jesus'—

¹ These sentences were written with a lively recollection of a beautiful article in the Spectator, which appeared probably in 1866.

² De Wette and Döllinger have gone so far as to say that the reference is intended as a correction.

³ St. Matthew iv. 12; St. Mark i. 14; St. Luke iii. 20; St. John iii. 14-31.

"then by mentioning the Baptist as even then "baptizing in Ænon near to Salim.' And he "shows this distinctly by saying—'for John was "not yet cast into prison.'" ¹

What is the originality of the Baptist's character even in the synoptics? Not the ascetic garb and fare. Herein he did but profess to imitate Elijah. Not "boldly rebuking vice." Elijah and Micaiah stood up as bravely to Ahab. Not even "patiently suffering for the truth's sake." The mutilated body, "stretched upon the threshold of Christianity," only marks the via dolorosa, over which the whole army of martyrs have passed to their crown.

It is to something else that we must look as constituting his originality.

The world recognizes jealousy as the chief weakness of popular leaders and preachers. Such men are spiritual athletes who cannot bear a rival. The greatest of popular preachers, the darling of Antioch and Constantinople, admits that he who can overcome this is almost like the disembodied spirits, whose lives, pure as the crystal stream, can never be darkened by any shadow of envy, or vainglory, or other sickly or unworthy passion.² But the leader of a great party in a nation; the founder of a sect, which has vitality enough to live on for years; who was possibly even regarded by some as Messiah, when St. John presided at Ephesus—that he should have bowed down in prostrate humiliation before a younger successor, this is original indeed.

¹ St. John ii. 11; iii. 23, 24. EUSEB. PAMPH., Histor. Eccles. iii. 24. Cf. TISCHEND. Synopsis Evang. xxiv., xxvi.

² εἰ μὴ τις...ὁμοίως ταῖς ἀσωμάτοις μελετήσῃ διακεῖσθαι δυνάμεσιν αἰ μὴτε φόβῳ, μὴτε δόξῃς ἔρωτι, μὴτε ἐτέρῳ τινὶ τοιούτῳ θηρῶνται νοσήματι. S. JOANN. CHRYSOST. De Sac. v. 8.

The Baptist was distinguished by strength, independence, purity.

By strength. If ever there was a man unlike the lithe reed that gives itself to be tossed¹ by the wind, it was the Baptist. Your strong man is self-conscious. He has presided over the slow and painful elaboration of his character. He has looked on with satisfaction at the stiffening of his moral fibre into steel, and knows what it is worth. "Humility," it has truly enough been said, "has never been a feature of strong Jewish natures." Yet this strong man says—"He that cometh after me is stronger than I."²

Independence is another of his characteristics. Yet, like David in God's presence declaring "I will be base in my own sight," so the Baptist exclaims, "Whose shoes I am not worthy to stoop down and unloose."³

Above all the Baptist was pure. An effective moral teacher must "in purity of manhood stand upright." Never could he have brought men to repentance, if he had not himself repented. The words "generation of vipers" would have been a mere scream of impotent rage, if he had not crushed the serpent in his own heart. Yet, in the presence of Jesus, that pure soul seems black like the waters of a mountain-lake in the neighbourhood of the newly-fallen snow. The baptism of water he knew; of the baptism of fire, searching and sifting to the marrow, he recognized the need—"I have need to be baptized of Thee."

¹ σαλευόμενον. St. Matthew xi. 7.

² ισχυρότερος.

³ St. John i. 27.

This abnegation it is which is so thoroughly original. Nothing in the Baptist's early life can account for it. Only sons, like the child of the aged Zacharias, are not commonly very unselfish. It ill becomes us, lounging in our easy chairs, the "heirs of all the ages" in cookery and scientific comfort, to sneer at asceticism. But unnatural humility in one direction is sometimes made up for by unnatural pride in another. The haughtiest of the sons of men have worn haircloth next their skin, and lived upon fare less delicate than locusts and wild honey. The solution is not given by Renan, when he says—"there is no other instance of the chief of a school receiving, with prostrate humility, the man who is to succeed and to eclipse him. But the Baptist was of the same age as Christ, and very young according to the ideas of the times—and youth is capable of any abnegation." One knows not what young men will think of the interesting quality thus ascribed to youth. Those who are older probably agree with Aristotle, who tells us in his Rhetoric, that "the young are fond of honour, or rather fond of victory; for youth desires superiority," and that "young men are high-souled." He adds the reason with profound truth. They are not permanently subdued by the humiliating discipline of life.¹

We have dwelt upon this central characteristic of the Baptist at some length, because the way in which it is grasped by St. John illustrates one peculiarity of his Gospel. All his delineation of the Baptist brings out this note of his character (of course in measure perceived by the synoptics) with increasing clearness—"he confessed and denied not, but confessed I am not the Christ;"—"behold the Lamb of God;" "He must increase, but I must decrease."² It is the Baptist's picture seen in the light of his utter self-abnegation.³

As in the case of this delineation of character, so it is with all others in this Gospel. The portraits

¹ καὶ μεγαλόψυχοι· οὔτε γὰρ ὑπὸ τοῦ βίου πω τεταπείνωνται ἀλλὰ τῶν ἀναγκαίων ἄπειροί εἰσιν, καὶ τὸ ἀξιοῦν αὐτὸν μεγάλων μεγαλοψυχία. See the whole of the splendid delineation of the ἥθος of νεότης. ARIST. Rhetoric, ii. 12 (pp. 89-91, edit. Bekker).

² St. John i. 19, 20, 39, 46; iii. 30.

³ The synoptical delineation of the Baptist is, in one respect, analogous to its delineation of the Saviour. It is the loftiest and most spiritual aspects of character which are chiefly in the view of the fourth evangelist. Hence the Baptist's Christological conceptions in the fourth Gospel appear to be more evangelical than we should gather from the synoptics alone.

of St. John are idealized pictures. But let us understand the word. We see the likeness of an ordinary face, endowed with a sort of vapid and unmeaning beauty; a coarse face, padded and coloured by a cunning hand. People recognize the likeness and say, "it is such an one, only a little idealized." No! A face surprised with the glow of a virtuous feeling, or the visible inspiration of a triumphant thought; seen transfigured, interpreted in the light of an idea, of the idea of its life, this is an idealized picture. And such are the pictures in St. John.

We hear much of the "unhistorical character of St. John's school." But who are the really great masters of fiction? Not those who cover reams of paper with fine writing; but those who with the decided hand of genius strike off characters in a few bold lines,—those in whose pages the person and the words which he speaks are perfectly adapted. All competent readers feel that in Shakespēare there is no image, however exquisite, which would not lose by being detached from its context; no speech which would not suffer by being placed in other lips. If it be so, either the old man, with the senile style of which we hear so much, was a mighty dramatic genius; or, there is literal truth in the words—"that which we have seen and heard, declare we unto you."

II

There are two more Leading Ideas in St. John's Gospel.

1. It was intended to show the growth of belief and unbelief round our Lord's Person. We see the tide gathering, until at last it goes over the head of the victim. Three miracles form three points round which it gathers—the healing of the Bethesda, the cure of the blind man, the resurrection of Lazarus.

Let us take another important instance.

We have seen that the special miracles recorded by the synoptics are omitted by St. John, with the exception of the feeding of the five thousand, and of the incident which immediately follows it. Why do the circles intersect here?

No doubt the importance of the discourse in the synagogue at Capernaum, and the symbolical character of the miracle, are sufficient to account for this. Historically also these passages, taken in conjunction with the beginning of the seventh chapter, show us, that (while the synoptics mainly follow the Galilean Ministry, and St. John that in Jerusalem) the fourth evangelist was perfectly acquainted with the Galilean Ministry. For the Passover, mentioned in the sixth chapter, occurred in April; the Feast of Tabernacles in the seventh chapter, in the end of September, or the beginning of October.¹ St. John then tells us that in the interval, "Jesus was walking in Galilee," which perfectly describes one main external feature of the Galilean Ministry.²

But, assuredly, one object which the evangelist had in view was to trace out the progress of belief and unbelief. And in the fifth and sixth chapters we have two forms of unbelief contrasted. The unbelief of Jerusalem—"the Jews sought to kill Him,"—the unbelief of Galilee—"this is an hard saying, who can hear it?" "Many of His disciples went back, and walked no more with Him."³ Types of two forms of unbelief in all ages! One is sad or contemptuous, another fanatical. One sneers, another strikes. One sighs, another grinds its teeth. One would kill Him if it could; another turns upon its heel. One curses Him, and ridicules the sacred wounds; another only pierces His loving heart by leaving Him alone.

The very miracle is mentioned here, because it led to unbelief.

2. The fourth Gospel is throughout pervaded by the Idea of human witness, of human testimony to ¹ St. John vi. 4; vii. 2, 14.

² περιπατεῖ δ' Ἰησοῦς ἐν τῇ Γαλιλαίᾳ, St. John vii. 1.—"Ex Hebraismo, ut alia verba eundi, versor, commoror. vii. 1; xi. 54, in quibus locis simul respicitur quod Jesus ambulando docebat."—BRETSCHNEIDER, Lex. Man. s.v.

³ St. John v. 18; vi. 60, 66.

Christ—from the Baptist ; from the disciples ; from the Jews at Jerusalem, during the first Passover ; from the people which were with Him when He called Lazarus out of the grave ; from the Pharisees who believed, but did not confess ; from himself, who saw the blood and water coming from the pierced side ; from Pilate and Caiaphas.

St. John delights to arrest and make permanent the burning cries of confession wrung from the hearts of men. From the Baptist, "behold the Lamb of God !" from Nathanael, "Rabbi ! Thou art the Son of God ;" from the Samaritan woman, "is not this the Christ ?" from Peter, "we believe that Thou art that Christ, the Son of the living God ;" from the people, "when Christ cometh will He do more miracles than these which this man hath done ?" from the officers, "never man spake like this man ;" from the blind man, "Lord, I believe ;" from Martha, "I believe that Thou art the Christ, the Son of God ;" from Pilate, "I find no fault in Him ;" from Thomas, "my Lord and my God." Wonderful music ! drawn from the heart of man by the hand of faith, running up the scales from its faintest and lowest note—"Thou art the King of Israel,"—to its grandest and richest harmony, "my Lord and my God."¹ and gracious irony St. John, again and again, takes up the supposed objections, which in reality were so many proofs. Thus—"then said the Jews among themselves, whither will He go, that we shall not find Him? Will He go unto the dispersed among the Gentiles, and teach the Gentiles?" Easily answered by Gentiles, who were addressed by the Apostle from a Gentile city, in a Gentile language.¹ Again—"some said, shall Christ come out of Galilee? Hath not the Scripture said, that Christ cometh out of the seed of David, and out of the town of Bethlehem, where David was?"² And so, when men allow themselves to exclaim triumphantly, "John knew nothing of the birth in Bethlehem"—we can only say that they know little of John.

And here it may be mentioned, how with a grave

¹ St. John i. 29, 36, 49 ; iv. 29 ; vi. 69 ; vii. 31, 46 ; ix. 38 ; xi. 27 ; xix. 4 ; xx. 28.

(a) One Idea of this Gospel, then, is that it is a Gospel of witness, of human witness, to our Lord. Faith, in one aspect of it, is a plant which is intended to rise upward by twining round the pillar of evidence. We may see how much plausibility there is in the sneering assertion that the "Joannic school used, without scruple, the principle which was destined to become Hegelian, it ought to be so, ergo, it is;" and "that it is, more and more, an admitted principle of criticism, that if we would write history, we must mould our conception after the type in the synoptics, not after that in the fourth Gospel." We may point to such a passage as the opening of the fourth chapter—"when the Lord knew how the Pharisees had heard that Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John, He left Judæa and departed again into Galilee,")—with its matter-of-fact but valuable historical explanation. Here, again, St. John refers to and illustrates the synoptics. For the fact that John was cast into prison would not, by itself, have determined our Lord's departure from Judæa into Galilee, which indeed was part of the dominion of Herod Antipas. Every attentive reader may see for himself, that one Leading Idea of this Gospel is founded upon the great historical principle of the validity of human testimony—the great safeguard against scepticism and fanaticism. "If we receive the testimony of men" to the effect that "Jesus is the Son of God"—writes St. John in his Epistle, with evident reference to his Gospel.¹ The very form of the expression² shows that we do assuredly receive such witness, not only as Christians, but as rational men, according to principles which recommend themselves naturally to the unsophisticated human intellect.

¹ St. John vii. 35.

² Ibid. ver. 42.

(b) But again, as the witness of God is greater, so this Gospel is full of Divine witness to Jesus. Hence the mention of the attesting voice from heaven—"I have both glorified it and will glorify it again." Hence the intense conviction that the Scriptures are "they which testify of Him;"¹ that "had they believed Moses, they would have believed Him." Hence the accumulated reference to type and prophecy in the narrative of the atoning death. To a mere human historian there might have seemed to be no more of deep purpose in the particular cruelties inflicted by the rude soldiery and the furious mob, than in the shape of the tangled knots of sea-weed flung by the spring-tide upon the beach. But every incident in the central event of the history of humanity is to his eye arranged "by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God." The lots upon the poor vestment that wrapped the wasted form were cast by a Divine hand. The vessel with vinegar, the sponge and hyssop, were not there by chance. The perfection and dignity of that body, which seemed so helpless, were guaranteed by the rubric of the Divine ritual in regard to the paschal lamb—"not a bone of him shall be broken." The thrust of the soldier's lance is in the dark background of Zechariah's prophecy, and written upon the very body that shall come in the clouds of heaven. "They shall look on Him whom they pierced."² The evangelist's spirit sails over the deep of Scripture as over an Equatorial

¹ 1 St. John v. 9.

² εἰ λαμβάνομεν.

¹ St. John xii. 28; v. 39-46.

² Ibid. xix. 24; Psalm xxii. 18; v. 36; Exodus xii. 46; Psalm xxxiv. 20; v. 37; Zechariah xii. 10.

Ocean; on the far horizon of prophecy he sees its Southern Cross.

(c) Christ's own miracles are yet another witness in this Gospel, one of whose Leading Ideas is witness. "I have greater witness than that of John; for the works which the Father hath given Me to finish, the same works that I do, bear witness of Me, that the Father hath sent Me."¹

Miracles are called by four names in the New Testament. Of these three are thrown together in some passages.² Miracles are potencies, as manifestations of Divine power; things amazing (or marvellous in one passage),³ as producing holy awe and amazement; signs, as moral evidences to all who are right disposed.

¹ St. John v. 36.

² Ἰησοῦν τὸν Ναζωραῖον, ἄνδρα ἀποδεδειγμένον ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ εἰς ὑμᾶς δυνάμεσιν καὶ τέρασιν καὶ σημείοις (Acts ii. 22); συνεπιμαρτυροῦντος τοῦ Θεοῦ σημείοις τε καὶ τέρασιν καὶ ποικίλαις δυνάμεσιν. (Hebrews ii. 4.) Cf. the miracles of the hellish caricature of Christ. οὗ ἐστὶν ἡ παρουσία κατ' ἐνέργειαν τοῦ σατανᾶ ἐν πάσῃ δυνάμει καὶ σημείοις καὶ τέρασιν ψεύδους. (2 Thessalonians ii. 9.) "The combination σημεῖα καὶ τέρατα is found in the synoptics (St. Matthew xxiv. 24; St. Mark xiii. 22); St. John iv. 43; in St. Paul's Epistles (Romans xv. 19; 2 Corinthians xii. 12; 2 Thessalonians ii. 9), and most frequently in the Acts (eight times cc. i.-xv.). It is not found in the Catholic Epistles or the Apoc." (Epistle to the Hebrews, BISHOP WESTCOTT, p. 40.) The δύναμις has an indication of power behind it; the τέρας is a singularity, which attracts an awe-struck observation. (See FRITZSCHE, Epist. ad Rom. Tom. iii. 270, on its connection with τηρέω = res observanda); the σημεῖον is the appeal of the wonderful to the moral nature.

³ θανυμία. St. Matthew xxi. 15.

The fourth synonym for miracles is works, frequently used by St. John.

St. Paul's use of works throws instructive light upon this. By works alone he never means good works. They are opposed to faith, as an inward principle of heavenly life to the sum total of the product of the weakened and enslaved powers of the natural man.¹ Works are those things which it is natural for man to do, being what he is.

Christ's works are to be interpreted on the same principle. They are, as the Baptist in St. Matthew's Gospel heard of them,² such works as the Christ would do, such as were natural for Him to work. There are many speculative difficulties about miracles. We are used to reasoning from miracles up to Christ; may we not reason from Christ down to the miracles? Given a being like Christ—then the Christmas Eve, the star of the Epiphany, the glory of the Transfiguration, the riven rock, the rent vail, the opened grave, the Ascension to the heaven of heavens, are but the fitting framework of that divine picture. Voices from the silence which men deem eternal, and rays from the world which to them is darkness, may well haunt with their echoes, and lighten with their glory, the pathway of a life like that. The sick healed, the demoniacs dispossessed, the bread multiplied, the winds hushed, the waves on which He trod as securely as if they were Galilean meadows upon a summer's day, all these cease to be unnatural—"His Name is Wonderful." Therefore the supernatural is His natural element; supernatural works are natural for Him to do. For the believer, the Person of Christ witnesses to His miracles. For the unbeliever, the miracles may witness to His Person.

¹ Tholuck on Romans.

² τὰ ἔργα τοῦ Χριστοῦ. St. Matthew xi. 2.

(d) There is a fourth testimony in the Gospel, one of whose Leading Ideas is testimony—the witness of Jesus to Himself—to His glory, to His sinlessness—"though I bear record of Myself, yet My record is true."¹

Consider what this witness is. If any of us know a holy man, we know a humble man. The holiest men are the most conscious of their own sinfulness. It is not a fashion of speech. It is not cant or hypocrisy. The writer who is perfectly satisfied with his own lines is not a poet. The painters or sculptors who have no noble dissatisfaction with their work, may be ingenious and dexterous, but they are not artists. They have none of that straining forward to an unattained and unattainable ideal of beauty, which is the heritage of genius. So too the man who is perfectly content with his own spiritual condition may have a mechanical regularity of habit. He may be a respectable Pharisee. But he is utterly without that saintliness which is, as it were, the genius of goodness.

¹ St. John viii. 14.

Now Jesus had the loftiest ideal of duty. He was also the meekest and humblest of men. Yet in His life there is one fundamental difference from the lives of the saints. They are full of burning words of penitence: they are burdened with cries of confession. But we have long discourses of Jesus. We have one soliloquy with His Father in the seventeenth chapter. Yet there is no confession of sin. He can bare His breast to His enemies, and say—"which of you convinceth Me of sin?" He can go further; He can declare—"the Prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in Me." Further yet—in those solemn moments when death is near; when moral natures, seemingly made of the strongest granite, crack and crumble before the fire of eternity; He can lift up His calm and trustful eyes to heaven, and say—"I have glorified Thee on the earth, I have finished the work which Thou gavest Me to do."¹ And with this we know that His spiritual insight was so keen and piercing that not one mote could have floated upon the tide of His purity without being detected by that eagle eye,—that one speck or stain could not have rested on the very skirts of the garment of His humanity, without soiling in

¹ St. John xvii. 4.

His sight the raiment that was as white as snow. This holy Man, with the highest idea of duty; this humble Man, who prays falling upon His face; this keen-sighted Man, who sees further into sin than any other, declares that His life and the perfect rule of goodness are in unbroken harmony. What witness is comparable to this witness of Jesus to Himself?¹

On the whole, then, the Leading Ideas of St. John's Gospel are these. First, it is, in a special sense, the Gospel of the Incarnate Word. Then it is the Gospel in which the miracles and discourses of ¹ Conquest, Victory, is a Leading Idea of St. John's Gospel, in this sense, that the whole history of Jesus in that Gospel leads up to it. The word itself first occurs (θαρσεῖτε ἐγὼ νενίκηκα τὸν κόσμον, xvi. 33). But this first prelude touch awakens a fuller music in St. John's later writings. Conquest becomes a Leading Idea of the First Epistle (1 St. John ii. 13, 14; iv. 4; v. 4, 5). The Idea is still more dominant in the Apocalypse. [Each Epistle to each of the seven Churches closes with a promise which begins with τῷ νικῶντι or ὁ νικῶν, Apoc. ii. 7, 11, 17, 26; iii. 5, 12, 21. For the victory of Christ or of His people, see iii. 21; v. 5; vi. 2; xi. 7; xii. 11; xiii. 7; xv. 2; xvii. 14; xxi. 7.] The idea of victory is almost exclusively confined to St. John's writings. The exceptions are Rom. viii. 37; xii. 21; 1 Cor. xv. 55, 57. The substantive νίκη is found only in 1 St. John v. 4; but the form νίκος is in Matt. xii. 20; 1 Cor. xv. 54, 55, 57. The rendering Conquest seems preferable to Victory. It is not possible by any other translation to present to an English reader the fourfold repetition of the word (1 St. John v. 4, 5). "The Victory that hath overcome the world" (R.V.) fails in this, "the Conquest that hath conquered" succeeds. The noble translation of ὑπερνικῶμεν ("more than conquerors," Rom. viii. 37) is thus rendered consistent—happily retained by the revisers, though at variance with their principles.

Jesus, the sacraments of the Church, and the characters of those who are delineated, are spiritualized, and viewed from a certain high and ideal standpoint. Finally, it is the Gospel which exhibits the growth of belief and unbelief; it is the Gospel of witness—the witness of men, the witness of the Father, the witness of Scripture, the witness of miracles, the witness of Himself.¹

¹ See Note B.

NOTE A

THIS may be a fitting place for observing a few of those minute touches in this Gospel, too minute and too delicate to have been deliberately invented ; which, so far as they are not fancifully interpreted, do much to establish the verisimilitude of a narrative. They do not, indeed, by themselves make it probable (the probable is that for the reality of which we can allege some reason) but likely—"bearing the closest resemblance to that which is classed in our minds under the predicament of existence."¹

Here are a few instances.

(a) "His disciples came, and marvelled that He talked with the woman: yet no man said, why talkest Thou with her?" "The disciples looked one on another, doubting of whom He spake. Now, there was leaning on Jesus' bosom one of His disciples, whom Jesus loved. Simon Peter, therefore, beckoned to him, that he should ask who it should be of whom He spake."²

With us men, familiarity breeds contempt. No dignity will assert itself against a certain degree of intimacy. "No man is a hero to his valet." These passages, quite incidentally and informally, show that it was not so with the Word made Flesh. Those simple men were with Him in familiarities, that would have discoloured anything that was not heavenly, and uncrowned anything that was not Divine. They trod the same road; they rocked in the same boat; they rested in the same chamber; they partook of the same coarse fare; they drew out of the same scanty purse. Man exacts much of his idols; he sets them up easily, but pulverizes them upon very slight provocation. One bitter word, one fretful or peevish sentence, one self-seeking action, one questionable look, would have dethroned Him. But "all our experience is reversed."¹ With us, familiarity breeds contempt. But as the disciples grow more and more familiar with Him, they find themselves more and more in presence of an awful dignity upon which they dare not intrude.

¹ Blanco White (quoted in Bishop Hampden's Philosophical Evidences of Christianity).

² St. John iv. 27; xiii. 22, 24.

(b) "I go not up to the Feast"² (for οὐκ, not οὐπω, is certainly the true reading). A charge of falsehood, or of fickleness, obviously lies against these words. Yet they are fearlessly written down, though their meaning does not appear upon the surface.

One like the Word made Flesh must and will use words in His own sense. Our great Christian moral philosopher has said that "a man may be under the strictest moral obligation to say what he foresees will deceive, without his intending it." At all events, Jesus will weight these words with the meaning of His own soul. He is on the journey of which we read towards the close of the ninth chapter of St. Luke. To Him there is but one going up to Jerusalem, one Feast. "My going up is not to this Feast."³

(c) "Jesus wept."

Just before "He was troubled." Rather troubled Himself,⁴ for a certain divine decorum tempers all that we read of Him, and He is not represented to us as possessing a nature to be played upon by

¹ BUSHNELL. Character of Christ.

² ἐγὼ οὐκ ἀναβαίνω εἰς τὴν ἑορτὴν, ταύτην, ὅτι ὁ ἐμὸς καιρὸς οὐπω πεπλήρωται. St. John vii. 8.

³ The germ of this explanation is found at an early date. Ἐλεγεν ὅτι οὐκ ἀναβαίνω, κ.τ.λ. οὐ γὰρ ἐψεύδετο, μὴ γένοιτο—μυστηρδῶς γὰρ καὶ πνευματικῶς διαλεγόμενου τοῖς αὐτοῦ ἀδελφοῖς οὐκ ᾔδεισαν τί ἔλεγεν· ἔλεγε γὰρ αὐτοῖς μὴ ἀναβαίνειν εἰς τὸ ἱερόν ἐν τῇ ἑορτῇ ἐκείνῃ· καὶ εἰς τὸν σταυρὸν τοῦ τελειῶσαι τέως τὴν οἰκονομίαν τοῦ πάθους αὐτοῦ.—Epiphan. (quoted by Tischend. Nov. Test. p. 814, Ed. 8). So Augustine. "Christo vero ille fuit dies festus, quo passione suā redemit mundum." S. August. de Q. Nov. et Vet. Test. Qu. 78.

⁴ ἐτάραξεν ἑαυτόν. St. John xi. 34.

passive emotions. Why did He trouble Himself now? We cannot fully tell. Perhaps, we may conceive the case of a physician coming into a room, where friends and children are sobbing over one whom they supposed to be doomed, himself weeping in sympathy, though sure that he can heal. But at least, this shows us that we have a real Christ. It was never invented. The imaginary Christ would have walked majestically up the slope of the Mount of Olives, and, standing with a halo of the sunset round His brow, have bidden the dead man rise. The real Christ was a dusty and wayworn man, who wept over the grave, and lifted up His eyes. The reality teaches us that the dead are not raised by a stoic philosopher, with an eye of ice and a heart of marble, but by One who is very Man, with the tender weakness that is more beautiful than all our strength. This, according to the judgment of centuries, is more majestic as well as more moving. But could a writer like St. John have invented it?

NOTE B

ONE most important inference as regards the character of our Lord's human knowledge should be drawn from the first great Leading Idea of the fourth Gospel.

"The Word was God, and the Word was made Flesh." He had not only a true Human body, but a "reasonable soul," a true Human intellect. In the one Person of Christ, there are two forms of wisdom, two manners of knowledge. The finite intelligence and the Infinite, the human and the Divine, differ as the created from the Uncreated, as the relative light of the Incarnate Word from the absolute light of the Uncreated Word. But they are at one, and work to one end.

Aquinas discusses the question whether our Lord had other than Divine knowledge. His answer is, that the affirmative is involved in the verity of His Incarnation. "Filius Dei naturam integram assumpsit, i. e. non solum corpus sed etiam animam, non solum sensitivam, sed etiam rationalem. Nihil naturalium Christo defuit, quia totam Humanam Naturam assumpsit. Ideo, in sexta Synodo damnata est positio negantium in Christo esse duas scientias, sive duas sapientias. . . . Minus lumen non offuscatur per majus, sed magis augetur, sicut lumen aeris per lumen solis! Et hoc modo lumen scientiæ non offuscatur sed clarescit in animo Christi per lumen scientiæ inditum.” (S. T. AQUIN. Part III. Qu. ix. Art. 1.)

Therefore the Human mind of Jesus is never alone.¹ And the processes and the development of the Human reason rest upon the Infinite Wisdom.

If this be the true idea of Christ, what shall we say of His word? Must there not be perpetual power, perfect truth, in the words of the Word made flesh?

We may smile bitterly with Schenkel at the simple men, who looked upon the very number of the four Gospels as divinely harmonizing with the quarters of the world, with the principal winds, with the form of the cherubim. We may be amused, if we will, at Augustine’s quaint yet beautiful conceit, in expounding and applying to St. John the text in the psalm, “the mountains shall bring peace, and the little hills righteousness to the people.”² The old man, with the shadows and the sunlights of the hills of Africa present to his mind, says—“the mountains are great souls, like that of John; the little hills are ordinary ones, like ours. Never should we have received the light of faith, unless those great mountain-tops, lighted up by the heavenly wisdom, had passed them on to us.” Yet as we read the words of Christ, and think who spoke them, we need not be ashamed to cry with Bernard—“I hear not Moses now. To me he is of stammering lips. Isaiah’s lips are unclean. Jeremiah cannot speak; he is a child. All the prophets are mute. Ipse, ipse, quem loquuntur, ipse loquetur.” S. Bernard. in Cant.

¹ St. John xvi. 32; v. 30; viii. 16-18; xiv. 10. See GRATRY. Les Sophistes, 335.

² S. Aug. Enarrat. in Ps. (Psalm lxxii. 3); see for more on the subject of our Lord’s Human knowledge, infra, VI. D. Note A.

VI

*THE LEADING IDEAS OF THE EVANGELISTS IN THE NARRATIVE OF THE PASSION*¹

A.—ST. MATTHEW

“When Pilate was set down on the judgment seat, his wife sent unto him, saying, Have thou nothing to do with that just man; for I have suffered many things this day in a dream because of Him. But the chief priests and elders persuaded the multitude that they should ask Barabbas, and destroy Jesus.”—ST. MATTHEW xxvii. 19, 20.

ST. MATTHEW'S Leading Idea may be clearly traced in his record of the Passion.

He has in mind throughout the literal Jews, unworthy as they had become; the false and narrow ¹ The writer's obligations to Lange in this division of his treatise are considerable (especially Life of Christ, vol. iv. 108—116, 180—189, 300—308, 427—468. English Translation). To Archdeacon Farrar he also desires to express his acknowledgments. The Archdeacon's works seem to possess that kind of originality which alone is profitable in theology. Since the publication of his two principal books, no man can well treat upon either great subject as he would have done before. Consciously or unconsciously, willingly or unwillingly, he breathes their atmosphere and is influenced by their spirit, even when, like the present writer, he may dissent from some of their conclusions.

Judaism which they and their fathers had made; and Jesus confronted with them.¹ Here, above all, the first Gospel is the Gospel of types; of prophecy interweaving and multiplying its marvellous coincidences; of the true, over against the fallen and degraded, Judaism and High Priest.

The proceedings of the representatives of the people form their eternal condemnation. The Roman Governor has deep in his nature some reverent conceptions of the majesty possessed by law even in its anger. But how terribly the sentence sounds to men used to think of the spotless ermine of our great magistrates! "The chief priests and elders, and all the council, kept seeking² false witness against Jesus to put Him to death."³ The High Priest's affected and theatric horror is itself a violation of the law which he professed to prize so highly. For that law expressly forbade one who filled so august an office to sully the majesty of his position by an act which showed such hysterical intensity of an ill-regulated passion of grief.⁴

¹ St. Matthew xxvi. 57; xxvii. 9, 35, 46.

² St. Matthew xxvi. 9, 15, 46. ἐξήτουν. St. Matthew xxvi. 59.

³ St. Matthew xxvi. 59.

⁴ St. Matthew xxvi. 65. Cf. Leviticus xxi. 10. ("And he that is the High Priest among his brethren, upon whose head the anointing oil was poured, and that is consecrated to put on the garments, shall not uncover his head, nor rend his clothes.") The very words of the LXX. are studiously preserved by St. Matthew. Cf. τὰ ἱμάτια οὐ διαῤῥήξει (Leviticus xxi. 10) with ὁ ἀρχιερεὺς διέῤῥηξεν τὰ ἱμάτια αὐτοῦ. (St. Matthew xxvi. 65.)

This is followed up by an outburst of vulgar hatred—the bitter sneer of fanaticism. “Others smote Him with the palms of their hands, saying, Prophecy unto us, thou Christ, who is he that smote Thee?”¹

Next, the judgment of Christ by the heathen, is decided by the baseness of the rulers, and by the violence of the mob, of His own people. “When they had bound Him they led Him away and delivered Him to Pontius Pilate, the Governor.”²

The same great idea fills St. Matthew’s soul throughout.

The treason and suicide of Judas (note the very name) is a concentration in a single life, so far as that is possible, of the treason and suicide of Judaism.³

How majestic is the bearing, how august the silence of the King of Israel before the representatives of Rome! “And He gave him no answer—no, not even so far as one word.”⁴

In an awful pause there comes a message from Procula, the Proconsul’s wife. Critics, who have studied Roman usages under the guidance of Tacitus, can no longer brand the incident as false. They are forced to content themselves with sneering at it as trifling—a woman’s dream. We need

¹ St. Matthew xxvi. 67, 68.

² Ibid. xxvii. 1, 2.

³ Ibid. xxvii. 3–11.

⁴ οὐκ ἀπεκρίθη—πρὸς οὐδὲ ἓν ῥῆμα. Ver. 14.

not ransack history for incidents where dreams have played some definite part. Perhaps some reader of these lines can recall a time when he was preparing to commit a great sin, and a warning has come from a woman's lips—"have thou nothing to do with it; I have suffered many things in a dream."¹ It will be observed that we have a glimpse of dreamland at the close as at the beginning of the Gospel. How far the dream was supernatural we cannot decide. The mind of the dreaming woman may have acted according to the subtle and occult laws which rule those rapid and evanescent phenomena. She had seen the Galilean, and the dignity and pathos of His bearing wove the strange scene from which she wakened scared and sobbing.

At all events, the fall of Judaism is brought out by this incident. In the long sad story of the Passion no Jew pleads for Jesus. That sweet office of softness and compassion is reserved for this Gentile lady. In St. Matthew's narrative, one little particle marks the contrast with a strange significance. "While he was sitting on the judgment seat, his wife sent unto him, saying, Have thou nothing to do with that righteous man, for I have suffered many things this day in a dream because of Him. But the chief priests and the elders persuaded the multitudes that they should ask for Barabbas, and destroy Jesus.”¹

¹ St. Matthew xxvii. 19.

After an ineffectual attempt by Pilate follows the hand-washing, as a symbolical expression of purity from a particular offence.² Critics say that the symbol was specifically Jewish, and that nothing similar is to be found in Roman trials. They may be quite right.³ But Pilate may well have heard of this piece of ceremonialism. The plagiarism of a thing so impressive may have seemed to him a politic and dexterous stroke of flattery. No doubt in its result the ceremony was ineffectual for Pilate’s purpose. But the imprecation has been fatally powerful—“and all the people answered and said, His blood be on us, and on our children.”⁴

The narrowness of Jewish fanaticism had soon spent itself. Its range of invention was limited—spitting, buffeting, blows, a taunt from the polemical sphere—and they had little fresh to say or do.

¹ ἀπέστειλεν πρὸς αὐτὸν ἡ γυνὴ αὐτοῦ λέγουσα. . . οἱ δὲ ἀρχιερεῖς καὶ οἱ πρεσβύτεροι ἔπεισαν τοὺς ὄχλους κ.τ.λ. (St. Matthew xxvii. 19, 20.)

In this δέ there is the wonder of a silent shame, the eloquent shudder of a suppressed horror. “So did the Roman woman; but the chief priests and elders (O the strangeness and the pity of it!) persuaded the multitudes that they should ask for Barabbas.” The change of the R.V. (“now” for “but”) is unhappy.

² St. Matthew xxvii. 24, 25.

³ “All the elders of that city, that are next unto the slain man, shall wash their hands over the heifer—and they shall say, Our hands have not shed this blood, neither have our eyes seen it.” See Deuteronomy xxi. 6–10.

⁴ St. Matthew xxvii. 25.

But the mockery of the Romans was more serious and more inventive, more largely tintured by a theatrical element. The Roman band¹ was a battalion of infantry from 400 to 600 strong. It has often been said in modern times that this mockery was unlikely to have taken place because it was so unworthy of the gravity of Roman legionaries.

Yet—not to speak of parallel instances gathered by the research of Bynæus—the temperament which would issue in such persistent buffoonery would seem to be part of the inheritance of the Roman nature. The modern Roman in the Corso at the carnival is the most gloomy and the most persevering of comedians,² a buffoon whose foolery is as pertinacious as it is childish. The legionaries gave themselves the treat of playing at a coronation. No considerable feature was wanting in that cruel childishness of men who were so strong. The mockery of imperialism seems to be wild; but it was deliberate. Over the shoulders of the august sufferer they threw a camp pallium, once dyed with cochineal, now worn and faded; there was the robing. Round His forehead they placed a diadem of the dreadful acanthus thorn, and in His hand a reed; there was the crowning. They bent the knee; there was the homage. They cried "Hail, King of the Jews"; there was the acclamation. They gave Him to drink vinegar mingled with gall; there was the wassail cup outside the camp.¹ They played at a coronation—and they played it to the bitter end, sullen triflers drawing out their sombre comedy. And in stupid inexorable rage, as the reed dropped from His grasp, they kept beating Him with it upon His head.² Death and suffering were always somewhere in the old Roman amusements. There was something wanting in the laughter of those who had not looked upon blood.

¹ συγκαλοῦσιν ἑλὴν τὴν σπείραν. St. Mark xv. 16.

² This has been noticed by the finest and subtlest of observers with her usual delicacy of touch.

“Il n’y a ni luxe ni bon goût dans la fête du carnaval ; une sorte de pétulance universelle la fait ressembler aux bacchanales de l’imagination, mais de l’imagination seulement ; car les Romains sont en général très sobres, et même assez sérieux, les derniers jours du carnaval exceptés. . . . Il y a parmi les masques, des hommes qui se promènent le plus ennuyeusement du monde, dans le costume les plus ridicule, et qui, tristes arlequins et taciturnes polichinelles, ne disent pas une parole—mais ont, pour ainsi dire, leur conscience de carnaval satisfaite, quand ils n’ont rien négligé pour se divertir.”—MADAME DE STAËL. Corinne, ou L’Italie. Livre ix. c. i. (La Fête Populaire).

In the section which follows the particulars (as befits the first evangelist) are mainly connected with prophecy. We find the picture of the callousness of the human heart—the guards gambling, the cruelty beyond that of the cold experimentalist groping his way down the dim track of animal pain. St. Matthew records the title in that form which is most suitable to his Leading Idea.¹ He also records the fanatical Jewish mockery; the horrid echoes of distorted psalms below the cross; the blasphemy, not of ignorance but of Scriptural knowledge. Of the Eli cry, so frivolously misunderstood—the one last word recorded by the two evangelists—we speak in the next Discussion. At last one pitying hand passed a cool sponge over the parched lips.

¹ Ἰξος μετὰ χολῆς μεμιγμένον (St. Matthew xxvii. 34), i.e. a potion flavoured with myrrh, mingled with gall or poppy-juice. This was prepared for sufferers upon the cross, often apparently by Roman women—the one touch of humanity in all the dreadful preparatives.

² ἔλαβον τὸν κάλαμον καὶ ἔτυπτον εἰς τὴν κεφαλὴν αὐτοῦ. St. Matthew xxvii. 30.

Such is the Leading Idea of Christ crucified in St. Matthew.

Jesus in His crucifixion is Messiah, the King of the Israel of God. As He moves through the prismatic sheet, His form is tinged with the hues of types. Psalms rise to some mystic chant, of which His sufferings are the subject. Prophetic bells keep tolling in the distance, and our hearts hear the name of Jesus between their strokes. He is the inheritor of all the sorrow and of all the glory which floats upon their music. The first Gospel gives us the Passion in the light of the Old Testament. We can best read the twenty-second Psalm and the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah with St. Matthew at the foot of the Cross.

¹ οὗτός ἐστιν Ἰησοῦς ὁ βασιλεὺς τῶν Ἰουδαίων. St. Matthew xxvii. 37.

VI

THE LEADING IDEAS OF THE EVANGELISTS IN THE NARRATIVE OF THE PASSION

B.—ST. MARK

“And when the centurion, which stood over against Him, saw that He so cried out, and gave up the ghost, he said, Truly this man was the Son of God.”—ST. MARK xv. 39.

IN St. Matthew we have the Passion of the true Messiah and Priest, confronted with the degradation of the apostate priesthood and people of Israel in the moment of its apparent victory.

In St. Mark, Jesus appears again as the Divine Hero. In brief, incisive, majestic lines, His death is recorded in its strength and majesty. “The beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God,” such is its opening cry. Deep answers unto deep. A voice from beneath the cross gives its unexpected response—“truly this man was the Son of God.” “Jesus cried with a loud voice and gave up the ghost.”¹ A Roman centurion must probably have seen many deaths, but he never saw a death like that. In the last moment of life, the voice is weak and faint before it sobs or sinks into the long silence. Every other death is a defeat ; this was a victory. Willingly, in the plenitude of power, Jesus dies. Often, when the smoke drifts away from before the lines, a cry of victory goes up. Never a cry like that. When the centurion saw that He so cried out, and gave up the ghost, he said, “truly this man was the Son of God.”

I

The vividness which is characteristic of the style of the second evangelist brings out the grandeur of one aspect of the Passion with peculiar power.

Two specimens of human weakness afford a contrast which presents this grandeur in its ennobling strength.

One of these two is thus told :—“ And a certain young man followed with Him, having a linen cloth cast about him, over his naked body ; and they lay hold on him ; but he left the linen cloth and fled naked.”² We may well associate St. Mark himself with this strong impulse to advance but quick retreat in the moment of danger. Ever through the darkness which surrounds the Saviour’s progress in the history of His Church He draws out a young, though sometimes not quite reflective enthusiasm. Yet spirits which have been finely touched to fine issues are never quite the same as if they had not received that touch.¹ Truly in St. Mark's flight was fulfilled the warning that "all ye shall be offended because of Me this night, for it is written, I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered."²

¹ St. Mark i. i ; xv. 39.

² Ibid. xiv. 50-52.

The second picture presented by St. Mark to enhance the Saviour's greatness by way of contrast is that of St. Peter. The historian who makes us see his narrative by lightning-flashes gives us one of these gleams of sudden insight about the impulsive apostle. "And Peter had followed Him afar off, even within, into the court of the high-priest, and he was sitting with the officers warming himself towards the blaze of the fire."³ We can see the red light on the bronzed features working with uncontrollable emotion.

¹ This incident is psychologically quite consistent with the Mark "who withdrew from Paul and Barnabas from Pamphylia, and went not with them to the work." Acts xv. 37, 38.

² St. Mark xiv. 27.

³ θερμαινόμενος πρὸς τὸ φῶς (St. Mark xiv. 54). How much homely wisdom there is in Bengel's pithy saying,—"sub corporis curâ negligitur animus!" It should not be overlooked that in the Petrine Gospel much which concerns Peter's repentance is made fuller and clearer. The two cock-crowings are sharply and definitely put ("and Peter went out into the porch, and the cock crew ; and straightway the second time the cock crew." St. Mark xiv. 68, 72. Note also ἀνεμνήσθη, ἐπιβαλὼν ἔκλαιεν. Ver. 72.

Beside these two irresolute forms; the young man flying in the hour of trial, Peter all flushed and flurried with his lie and sobbing in the bitterness of his shame; we contemplate on St. Mark's canvas of the Passion the calm unshaken serenity of the suffering Son of God.

Special touches are not wanting which bring out the majesty of sorrow.

St. Mark's picture of Jesus in the Prætorium is, perhaps, the most crowded and concentrated of the four. The elaborate mockery of a coronation; the robing, the crowning, the acclamation, the homage, the cup; is there in detail. The mantle for him is not merely dyed cochineal scarlet.¹ For him (as for St. John) it is an ideal lighted up with a significance—purple, "the purple."² The calm deliberate cruelty of measuring the head and plaiting for it the crown of the terrible acanthus with thorns nearly a finger long is told in words that cannot be mistaken—an affecting detail for imaginative devotion.³ The mock homage is more expressively made visible by St. Mark's pencil. "They smote His head with a reed, and did spit upon Him; and *bowing their knees*⁴ worshipped Him."

¹ χλαμύδα κοκκίνην περιέθηκαν αὐτῷ. St. Matthew xxvii. 28.

² ἐνδιδύσκουσιν αὐτὸν πορφύραν. St. Mark xv. 17. ἐξέδυσαν αὐτὸν τὴν πορφύραν. Ver. 20. ἱμάτιον πορφυροῦν περιέβαλον αὐτόν. St. John xix. 2.

³ περιτιθέασιν αὐτῷ πλέξαντες ἀκάνθινον στέφανον. St. Mark xv. 17.

⁴ τιθέντες τὰ γόνατα, ver. 19.

We may not pass from the narrative of the Passion in the two first evangelists without considering (1) the one of the last seven words from the Cross recorded by them, and (2) its coherence with their respective Leading Ideas.

1. The fourth word from the Cross is, no doubt, given by St. Mark in its most exact form.¹

Let us assure ourselves that the sentence was, indeed, most certainly spoken.

Is it not a strange, nay, a tremendous fact that this is the only last sentence of the dying Lord preserved by the two evangelists, St. Matthew and St. Mark? ² Let us conceive a missionary who has died a martyr's death. Some of his companions escape, and return to tell the glorious and pathetic story. Hundreds are anxious to know what the martyr said. Those who were present feel constrained to gratify this loving curiosity. Would there not be a feeling of dejection and of disappointment, if they told no more than this—"he said, my God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?"

Now, without denying that this saying is liable to be misunderstood (as the Agony has been misunderstood); a little reflection assures us that it also must be historical at least.

¹ Ἐλωὶ Ἐλωὶ, λαμὰ σαβαχθανί. St. Mark xv. 34. Cf. Ταλιθά κοῦμι. St. Mark v. 41. Ἐφφαθά, vii. 34. Ἀββὰ ὁ πατήρ, xiv. 36.

² St. Matthew xxvii. 46. St. Mark xv. 33, 34.

"Legends falsify." No doubt. But they falsify on the side of splendid exaggeration. Their heroes look larger than human, as they walk clothed, with the mist of their glory. A god, a demigod, a hero writhing like a crushed worm upon the earth, covered with a sweat of blood, feeling strange and out of place¹ in all God's world—no one ever invented that. It was a scandal in some measure to unwise and unfaithful Christian hearts in early times, who tried to erase the narrative in its fullest form from the third Gospel.²

Last words, it is urged, are sometimes deliberately invented; more often they are in the air, and grow spontaneously into shape. Our own day affords us an instance. The noble old officer, who gave Thackeray his idea of Colonel Newcome, is buried in a Scotch churchyard. A monument to his memory contains the beautiful sentence which tells how "Just as the last bell struck, a peculiar sweet smile shone over his face, and he lifted up his head a little and quickly said 'adsum,' and fell back—and he whose heart was as that of a little child, had answered his name, and stood in the presence of the Master."³ Local tradition will have it that the adsum was literally the last word of the officer whose remains lie close to the spot. But a hero never presents himself to the popular imagination as crying—"my God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?"

¹ ἤρξατο ἀδημονεῖν. St. Mark xiv. 33. St. Luke xxii. 42, 43.

² See the long discussion in the note on St. Luke xxii. 43, 44. (N. T. Grace, TISCHEND. Pp. 518, 519. Edit. vii.)

³ THACKERAY. The Newcomes, Ch. xlii. ("In which the Colonel says adsum, when his name is called").

The key to the difficulty lies in the answer which we give to the question—who and what is He who spoke the word from the Cross? The Catholic Christian answers, "I believe in one Lord Jesus Christ, God from God, Light from Light, Very God from Very God, who for us men and for our salvation came down from heaven, and was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary, and was made man, and was crucified also for us under Pontius Pilate."

If He who died upon the Cross were other or less than this, what follows? This.

He had formed illusions from His earliest days, and obstinately clung to them. As the darkness deepened round Him on Calvary, and no smile was seen upon His Father's face, and no angel's wing beat the gloom with its whiteness; as the last golden drops of the young life ebbed away upon the dust of Golgotha; as He was left to go down to the pit with thieves, amidst the yells of the people whom He hoped to deliver; a profound discouragement, a horror of the great darkness of despair took possession of His whole being. We may pity Him; but after all it is only one other young soul for whom the noble visions of opening life are belied by the cynical logic of circumstances.¹

Thus the Christ who is not the Church's Christ is discrowned by His own hand, and undeified by His own lips.

But let us take our answer from our Creed, and what follows?

It was, indeed, for three hours a time of darkness outwardly and inwardly. "It was now about the sixth hour, and a darkness came over the whole land until the ninth hour, the sun's light failing."² The darkness was not that of an eclipse,³ it was the seismic obscurity which so often accompanies earthquakes.⁴ The fierce pain; the torn brow; the thirst in the sultry and dust-choked darkness; the hatred of the people whom He loved; the indignity and shame, tortured that exquisitely susceptible mental and bodily organization. He remained silent three hours under the darkness; and death approached.

But why should He not meet it, calm and kingly, with a proud and superb self-control?

Because the answer of the Creed to the ques-

¹ Vie de Jésus, RENAN, 379-424. STRAUSS, The Old Faith and the New. Pp. 89, 90. (Blind's Translation.)

² St. Luke xxiii. 44, 45. R. V.

³ The apocryphal Act. Pilat. (A. xi. 2) with characteristic exaggeration adds "ἔκλειψις ἡλίου γέγονεν κατὰ τὸ εἰωθός." See TISCHEND. N. T. P. 533, n. Edit. vii.

⁴ ἡ γῆ ἐσείσθη, καὶ αἱ πέτραι ἐσχίσθησαν. St. Matthew xxvii. 51.

tion, "Who and what was He who died upon the Cross?" involves for Him a death under two conditions.

(a) It was a death which bore the punishment of sin. So a prophet tells us. "The chastisement of our peace was upon Him."¹ So Apostles teach. "He hath made Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin." "His own self bare our sins in His body to the tree."² Now the peculiar bitterness of the punishment of sin to any soul that has ever known the presence of God is its removing us from that presence—our alienation from God.³ What must that have been to Him who could say, "I live by the Father"?⁴

This word from the Cross, then, is the compendium of the punishment of man's sin in man's representative.

(b) But, further. That death, in the view of primitive Christianity, is a "tasting death for every man,"⁵ i. e. for each and all. His consciousness was in a sense fused with ours. The Prince of life felt death in His own Person

¹ Isaiah liii. 5.

² 2 Corinthians v. 21; 1 Peter ii. 24.

³ So Moses, the "ocean of theology." "Ye shall bear your iniquities . . . and ye shall know My alienation, מְנוּחָה, lit. negation, keeping back, standing off." Numbers xiv. 34. (R.V.)

⁴ ἐγὼ ζῶ διὰ τὸν πατέρα. St. John vi. 57.

⁵ ὑπὲρ παντός. Hebrews ii. 9.

as the death of humanity. A great Lutheran thinker has ventured to say that "the heart of God felt death in the dying heart of men." Then death died in the heart of the God-Man, and the dereliction melted away in depths of light.

2. This last word coheres with the Leading Ideas of the two first evangelists very closely.

(a) For St. Matthew, Jesus, by using the first verse, claims the whole of the twenty-second Psalm for Himself. He makes the pathos and the exultation of it, the Passion and the power, alike His own.

(b) For St. Mark the very word of dereliction leads to the most glorious of proofs that the dying sufferer is indeed the strong Son of God. The world listens, and will murmur again and again "despair, impatience, ignorance." It is, indeed, a proof of His real suffering in His human soul—a sweet protest, if we will—but it leaps to His lips with a shout of triumph. The Gospel of the dying Lamb is also the Gospel whose symbol is the lion. At the ninth hour Jesus cried with a great voice,¹ "Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani." The darkness is gone and over. The forsaking is a thing of the past.² Such a death is a proof even to the centurion that He who so dies is more than human.

¹ φωνῇ μεγάλῃ. St. Mark xv. 34.

² εἰς τί ἐγκατέλιπές με ; Ver. 35.

VI

THE LEADING IDEAS OF THE EVANGELISTS IN THE NARRATIVE OF THE PASSION

C.—ST. LUKE

ST. LUKE'S narrative of the Passion is pervaded by the Leading Ideas to which we referred fully in the Discussion upon the third Gospel. The beauty of Jesus in His sorrow and suffering is present to the evangelist's heart and guides his pencil. To the physician we are indebted for the record of the physiological fact of the bloody sweat; to him who had learned so much about the hosts of heaven for the incident of the strengthening angel.¹ From the psychological evangelist we learn much of the curiosity of Herod and the indecision of Pilate with its fearful issue.² He, and he alone, records the look of pitiful and reproachful love, which half broke Peter's heart.¹ The chronicler of woman's heart in the presence of Jesus gives us the pathetic narrative of the women "wailing and lamenting Him," and the words, at once gentle and terrible, which He spoke with His face turned to them.² The revealer of the secrets of the unseen world records the sentence that tells us of the secret influence behind the general temptation of the Apostles, and of the special strength given to Peter after recovering from his fall.³

¹ St. Luke xxii. 43, 44.

² Ibid. xxiii. 8, 20, 25.

I

A consideration of the three last words from the Cross which are peculiar to the third evangelist, may probably afford the best development of this part of our subject.

In those three words we see the beauty of the dying Jesus in forgiving tenderness, in pardoning power, in perfect peace.

1. The beauty of forgiving tenderness.

¹ St. Luke xxii. 60-63. For another minute circumstance in a previous part of the third Gospel peculiar to St. Luke, cf. the ἐφώνει (viii. 8) with St. Mark iv. 9.

² σπλαγχείς πρὸς αὐτάς. St. Luke xxiii. 27-32.

³ ἰδοὺ ὁ Σατανᾶς ἐξητήσατο ὑμᾶς... ἐγὼ δὲ ἐδεήθην περὶ σοῦ. St. Luke xxii. 31, 32. It may here be added that thoughts bearing upon the psychology of the lost are given with peculiar force by St. Luke (xiii. 24-27). (Cf. however, St. Matthew xii. 45-xiii. 25-31, esp. ἄρξεσθε λέγειν, v. 26.) "O quam novus erit miseriæ sensus, et serus, et diuturnus."—BENG.

They have finished all the dreadful preparatives. They have nailed Him to the Cross. They have stretched Him along the hard bed of agony. They are preparing to raise it with its sacred burden. His first word is of forgiveness for the crucifixion, for the executioners, for those who condemned Him. He pleads before the Father the sole extenuation of their guilt—"Father! forgive them, for they know not what they do."

2. The second of the last words is also peculiar to St. Luke.

The thieves were nationalist insurgents. At first, both joined in blaspheming Christ.¹ One is the harder villain,² probably has been "the evil genius" of the other. He only understands an armed Messiah, a Christ of earth. The other had seen part of the Passion. He had heard the first word. The awful earnestness of the prayer elevated his spirit, its tender forgiveness won his heart. The repentance, so rare upon a soft bed, ripened quickly in the sultry temperature of Calvary. He confesses his sin, and makes his act of faith.

Here is the highest illustration of one of St. Luke's great Leading Ideas. It is the Gospel of triumphant grace, of plenary forgiveness. The same pencil drew the penitent woman³ and the penitent thief. The first picture is soft and coloured. This is cut, and cut as if with the point of a diamond on a plate of crystal.

¹ St. Matthew xxvii. 44.

² Lange.

³ St. Luke vii. 44 sqq.

In this kingly word there is an assurance, a promise, and a revelation.

There is an assurance, "verily I say unto thee."¹ It is the peculiar style of Jesus. In intellectual society the so-called autocrats (who are really mere presidents of republics of small talk) say "I think." Profound students, much more random readers who grow dissipated among their books, exclaim "I read." The hard logician, as he works his way carefully from his premiss to its conclusion, writes "I infer." Positive people repeat over and over "I say." But the form of Christ's speech is different, "Amen, I say." An act of faith in this is an act of faith in Him.

The promise is twofold.

One part of it is temporal, and gives the sufferer hope of a gracious abridgment of suffering. Men might and did live on even for days upon the cross. The constrained position, the rigid tension, the awful cramp, as well as the nails and the ever heightening fever, seemed to ensure a speedy death. Yet, strong as such desperate men often are, he might shake the cross with his throes of agony hour after hour. Here was a welcome hope of death ere the sunset faded from the sky—"to-day."²

¹ Ἀμὴν σοι λέγω.

² σήμερον. St. Luke xxiii. 43.

But there was a better part of the promise. He is "able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think."¹ The dying man only asks for recollection; that the Messiah-King in the moment of triumph should revert to one who had been His humble companion in death. "Jesus, remember me when Thou comest in Thy Kingdom."² The promise gives so much more than the penitent thought of. Not possibly, but "verily"; not in some remote future, but "to-day"; not vaguely, a unit among the surging millions, but close to Him, all the ignorance enlightened, all the hardness softened, all the sin pardoned—"with Me."³ He says to this man as He had done to His own chosen—"where I am, there shall also My servant be."⁴

But that which peculiarly illustrates Leading Ideas of the third Gospel in this light is contained in the latter part of the promise, and in the general character of the whole incident.

For a third bright thread is inwoven into the texture of the promise. One of the Leading Ideas of St. Luke is to draw up at intervals, reverently and sparingly, but really,⁵ the veil that hangs

¹ Ephesians iii. 20.

² Ἰησοῦ, μνήσθητί μου ὅταν ἔλθῃς ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ σου. St. Luke xxiii. 42.

³ μετ' ἐμοῦ. Ver. 43.

⁴ St. John xii. 26.

⁵ St. Luke xi. 24; xvi. 9, 10, 31.

between this world and the next; to gratify or awe a pious curiosity by some distant glimpses of the conditions of the world unseen. This is one of St. Luke's revelations. It is the great dictum probans for the rest of the saints in Paradise.¹ The common loving speech which makes mention of the departed as in heaven is not false. But it is inaccurate. Paradise is the park, and the park is not quite the palace. There are two departments of bliss. The souls in rest have a hope as well as a memory. The Garden of Eden in the Old Testament is Paradise²—a word rich with thoughts of greenery, rest, and coolness. "In Eden are fairer trees than in Golgotha."

The whole tone and complexion of the incident and of the Saviour's word is in intense accordance with St. Luke's principal Leading Idea.

Ever since Christ pardoned the thief the Church has believed in pardoning grace. She sends to the inmates of the jail and to the outcasts of the streets, because she knows that the worst sinner may be but a saint spoiled. We perceive that the sea of grace flows so full and breaks so high that we can never single out a point where the tide can never wash and the wave can never reach—that we cannot pronounce of any human heart that it will never be softened, or of any human spirit that it will never rest in Paradise.

¹ ἐν τῇ παραδείσῳ. St. Luke xxiii. 43.

² גֶּן-עֶדֶן, Genesis ii. 15, is παράδεισος ἐν Ἑδέμ in LXX. Bos-suet's summary of St. Luke xxiii. 43 is of matchless pregnancy: "To-day—what speed!—with Me—what companionship!—in Paradise—what rest!"

3. The seventh of the last words is also peculiar to St. Luke. If he delights in happy departing words¹ of the saints of God,² how much more would he exhibit to the Church the perfectly radiant and peaceful deposition of His spirit in the Father's hand by the King of saints! His beauty would not be quite perfect without that.

¹ St. Luke xxiii. 46.

² So Simeon, St. Luke ii. 28-36, and Stephen, Acts vii. 59, 60. Is not this in accordance with the Lucan spirit, and of a piece with Hebrews xi. 13? It may be noted that the third Gospel has had a peculiar attraction for many minds. The Emperor Charles V. on his death-bed called for the narrative of the Passion according to St. Luke to be read. The delightful English naturalist, Richard Jeffries, was much occupied at the close of his life in reading St. Luke.—See Sir W. Besant's Eulogy of R. Jeffries.

VI

THE LEADING IDEAS OF THE EVANGELISTS IN THE NARRATIVE OF THE PASSION

D.—ST. JOHN

“They crucified the Lord of Glory.”—I CORINTHIANS ii. 8.

THE Leading Idea of St. John here is the Passion in its ideal glory; the crucifixion of the Lord of Glory. In this we may find the key to much which the fourth evangelist inserts or omits.

I

The divine glory of the sufferer's self-possession is the main subject of the first section of the history of the Passion in St. John.¹

His fore-knowledge only brings this out more truly. The searchers are determined that He shall not hide or escape. “Judas having received the band and officers from the chief priests and Pharisees, cometh thither with lanterns and torches and weapons. Jesus therefore, knowing all the things that were coming upon Him, went forth and saith unto them, Whom seek ye? They answered Him, Jesus of Nazareth. Jesus saith unto them, I am He When therefore He saith unto them, I am He, they went backward and fell to the ground.”¹ The imagination of a student of the psalms naturally recurs to one passage as prophetic or anticipative.² But the incident, if not miraculous, perhaps gains in moral grandeur. Late in the night, now even at the full moon darkening among the shadows and the trees, Judas falls back; and the crowd surges and sways, awed by the dignity, by the halo of sanctity round one unarmed man. Even in that hour the glorious and noble self-possession of the great and good Shepherd saves His flock. “Of those whom Thou hast given Me I lost not one.”³

¹ St. John xviii. 1-11.

II

The Divine glory of the strange royalty possessed by the King of suffering is another Leading Idea of St. John's narrative.

“Jesus therefore came out wearing the crown of thorns and the purple garment. And Pilate saith unto them, Behold the man ! ”¹ This is one of the not very numerous passages, where we feel that the hand which holds the pen quivers with mingled emotion ; that the admiration as well as pity of Pilate’s exclamation almost overwhelms the evangelist. And the “Ecce Homo!” becomes the central inspiration of Christian art. We perceive the awe which has laid hold of the proud and cynical Proconsul. “The Jews answered him, We have a law, and by that law He ought to die, because He made Himself the Son of God. When Pilate therefore heard that saying he was the more afraid.”² The more afraid!³ Then an unwonted fear was upon him even before. But chiefly does His divine glory appear at the close of the section.⁴ Before the great masters of jurisprudence he weighs out the degrees of guilt in scales that are divinely delicate and divinely just.

¹ St. John xviii. 3-7.

² Psalm xxxv. 4.

³ St. John xviii. 9.

III

St. John’s Leading Idea of the Divine glory in the Passion also appears in the three last

¹ St. John xix. 5.

² μᾶλλον ἐφοβήθη. Ver. 8.

³ The difficult v. 11 seems to be explained thus : Pilate’s power of inflicting death was from above. The Roman magistrate had it committed to him by the divine right of fact. The High-Priest went out of his way to judge Jesus guilty of death, and then hand Him over to the secular power. Therefore he, and Judaism as represented by him, had incurred a greater guilt than that of Pilate.

⁴ St. John xix. 7-9.

words, whose preservation the Church owes to him.

I. The first of these is the third in order of the seven—"Woman! behold thy son!—behold thy Mother!"

"All His acquaintance, and the women that followed with Him from Galilee, stood afar off seeing these things."¹ Now that there was a chance of approach, John and certain of the women drew near, and stood hard by the cross.²

Of the two first of the seven words, the first is priestly, the second royal.³ The third, while it witnesses to His glory, is yet supremely human.

Let nothing rob us of that word.

"Possibly it was inserted owing to John's desire to gain importance and consideration." John hated lies, and branded them with a pen of burning point; yet he is ready to lie for a mean personal object, and that where his Master is deeply concerned!

"Perhaps the extreme loftiness of the character of Christ does not agree with such little personal tenderness at a crisis when He must have felt that He only lived for humanity."⁴

From the literary affectation of the celebrated academician we may justly appeal to all who have

¹ St. Luke xxiii. 49.

² παρὰ τῷ σταυρῷ, St. John xix. 25. In the μὲν, δὲ, (v. 25, οἱ μὲν οὖν στρατιῶται ταῦτα ἐποίησαν· εἰστήκεισαν δὲ παρὰ τῷ σταυρῷ, κ.τ.λ.) there is a significant contrast between extreme cruelty and tender love.

³ St. Luke xxiii. 34-43.

⁴ Renan.

known a mother and who still possess a heart. Who that reverences Jesus would be glad if He had forgotten or repulsed His mother? All the musical and golden pages of Plato's finest dialogue have not reconciled humanity to the passage where, after the fatal ship has arrived, we are told how when the wife of Socrates holds up his child, and pours out her passionate nature in sobs and cries, the philosopher coolly says—"let some one take her away," and proceeds with a disquisition upon the nature of pleasure and pain. Christians are thankful to read in the third word from the cross recorded by St. John the glory of that divine humanity. The heart of fire is also a heart of flesh.

The gift bestowed in those few syllables is divinely precious; for He who is so utterly poor¹ has yet gifts to bestow upon His own.

From a temporal point of view it is just the right gift. Mary had no other son; or the exquisite propriety of Jesus would never have delegated such a duty to another. He gives Mary to John and John to Mary. Meet temporal provision is thus made for the Mother of His love, and it is an affected spirituality which finds no significance and no lesson in this. There were also in His view affinities of heart and character, of thought and nature. And as the gift was the right one, so was it given just at the right moment. They had been standing hard by the cross; but from the very hour when this was spoken,¹ that disciple took her to his own home.² The sword, indeed, must pierce her soul, according to Simeon's word;³ but He will not turn it in the wound. He gently spares her the long darkness and the Eli cry.

¹ The ἱμάτια and χιτῶν (xix. 23) seem to keep up the gradation in the ἱμάτια, ἱματισμός, of Psalm xxii. 18. LXX. (בִּגְדֵי, "usually the outer garment of an Oriental." לְבוֹשׁ, the raiment generally). There may be an implied contrast between the sacred poverty of Him who was stripped of His very raiment, outer and inner (vv. 23, 24), and the rich gifts which He showers down from the Cross (v. 26).

But Jesus also bestows a lasting and a larger gift, in which the evangelist would have the Church recognize the divine glory of the donor.

The bearing of this sacred legacy upon the theology of the Church is too much overlooked. The real glory of Mary is forgotten in a fantastic cultus. Our Lord is not a god masquerading in human flesh; He is not a man deified; He is God humanified. In Mary we have the instrument of that awful dispensation. The fact was enshrined and graven in her very flesh. In John was found the theologian, for whom the idea was corrected and enlightened by long communion with the instrument through whom the fact was brought into the domain of history.

¹ εἰστήκεισαν. V. 25. ἀπ' ἐκείνης τῆς ὥρας. V. 27.

² The word home is not literally in the text: ἔλαβεν αὐτὴν εἰς τὰ ἴδια. V. 27.

³ St. Luke ii. 35.

The Leading Idea which underlies the special record of the third of the last words is the glory of the perfectly affectionate Divine humanity, and of the provision made for the central mystery of the faith by the communion established between the instrument and the theologian of the Incarnation.

2. The fifth word from the cross, the second of those preserved by St. John, gives further proof of the Divine glory of the perfect humanity.

Those who have seen much of pain and sickness know too well how much the patient is self-absorbed, how peevish and irritable the bravest and most gentle often become. The Roman in the great dramatist's representation remembers how Cæsar in his fever cried for drink like a sick girl. Sir Walter Scott describes the once chivalrous and stately gentleman swearing reproaches at the tender woman who nursed him because he broke the cup which was carefully handed to him.¹

The Saviour's bodily pain has one only of His last words—the fifth, "I thirst."² This is connected at various points with the Leading Ideas of St. John.

(a) The reality of His bodily pain is a great

¹ The delineation was believed by many who knew the great novelist to have been drawn from his father.

² $\delta\psi\omega$. St. John xix. 28, 29.

anti-Doketic fact. It necessarily implies the reality of His bodily and nervous organization. After His agony; after being dragged from tribunal to tribunal; after the mockery by the Jews before Herod, and by the Roman soldiers; after the crown of thorns; after the laceration of the tremendous Roman scourge, whip-cord stiffened with bone or metal; after the cramp upon the cross; after the big drops rolling down the face, and falling from hands and feet; after the parting with human love and the dereliction through the long hours of darkness; the raging death-thirst set in. Christ does not dwell upon His sufferings. From those white lips there drops only one word about them, but that is enough.¹

¹ Modern feeling always seems ready to contradict ancient. Ancient Christianity always held that no physical suffering was like His. Modern refinement minimises the physical suffering of the dying Lord. A justly celebrated preacher has essayed to prove that the thieves suffered greatly more. But the place of any creature in the hierarchy of life is exactly proportional to his place in the hierarchy of suffering. The lower mental and moral organization suffers less than the higher and more refined. The dying Chinese murderer, slowly starved to death, grins and sneers through the bars of his iron cage at those who surround it. St. Paul's word παθητός is very significant. Christ's is such a pathetic form. (Acts xxvi. 23.) It is difficult to suppose that σῶμα δὲ κατηρίσω μοι, as quoted in the Epistle to the Hebrews (x. 5, Ps. xl. 6), has no reference to the exquisitely sensitive organization of the Son of Man. Bishop Westcott's explanation of "the Body" as the totality of the Redeemer's own personal endowments—of the "preparation (κατηρίσω) as the moulding for varied and harmonious service" (Epistle to the Hebrews, 309, 310)—would rather include this conception.

(b) This word also intimates the attainment of a divine point in the history of the Passion.

"After this Jesus, knowing that all things are now finished."¹ The victory begins to brighten in His heart. There is perfect unity in His character as delineated by the different evangelists. As in St. Luke's account of the Temptation, there is first the spiritual struggle, then recognition of the bodily need.² Like some hero, absorbed in his glorious labours, he feels no exhaustion until the storm of battle has rolled by; then first He calls for drink.³

It should not pass unnoticed that in this place we have another indication of a Leading Idea of St. John. He intends us to see that He is of the Privy Council, and in the secrets of the King—that He is admitted to His confidence, and knows the thought which lies behind His deed or word.⁴

Certainly, too, the sacredness of the Old Testament is a Leading Idea with St. John as with St. Matthew, if not so markedly and obtrusively. No doubt his "that" is not of conscious, rigid, fatal predetermination.⁵ The little guard or detachment of four turned out that morning with the usual

¹ v. 28.

² "He did eat nothing in those days; and when they were completed, He hungered." St. Luke iv. 2.

³ This illustration, like much else in this part of our work, is due to Lange.

⁴ Cf. εἰδὼς ὁ Ἰησοῦς ὅτι ἤδη πάντα τετέλεσται (xix. 28) with ii. 21, 23, 25; vi. 6; xi. 13; xiii. 3-11, 24-26.

⁵ ἵνα, "ecbatic" not "telic," v. 28; cf. v. 24.

precision of the splendid Roman military machine. The sponge was not forgotten for cleansing any part of the accoutrements which might be stained with blood; nor the hyssop-stalk for convenience in using it; nor the vessel containing the allowance of "posca"—agreeable in a hot climate. Had one of the soldiers been told that each of these particulars was divinely ordered, he would have laughed in derision. Yet thirst was part of the image of the Sufferer in the prophetic mirror.¹

(c) But, further, in this word there is a revelation of the glory of His character.

How truly human He is! He complies with the claim of the body. To seek refreshment becomes a duty.² The Stoic, sheathed in marble, might affect to be above a bodily want. The Indian, ringed round by fire at the stake, has often disdained to ask for a drop of water to touch his blackened lips. The Fakir hangs without a word upon his hook. The difference between him and the dying Lamb is the difference between free self-sacrifice and a form of crazy suicide.³

In Him there is no affected superiority to suffering. He is truly human.

¹ Psalm xxii. 15; lxix. 21.

² There were three "draughts" on the cross. (a) The proffered opiate. St. Matthew xxvii. 34. (b) The wassail cup of the mock coronation. St. Luke xxiii. 36. (c) The liquid upon the sponge. St. John xix. 29.

³ This is another of Lange's illustrations.

His glory is further shown by the fact that this word contains an appeal based upon His belief in the humanity of man.

There are two elements in man which point to the past and to the future. The one is a fact founded upon a portion of his history; the other is a possibility which starts from a supernatural gift. Into the lower of these elements Christ had a terrible insight.¹ For the other—that ear which was so sensitive to the discords of sin, was the first that ever heard the vibrations of the one note that yet kept tune and time in the harlot's passionate heart. He read, as no moralist or physiologist has ever done, the law which goads on the habitual sinner, the waxing of the impulse with the waning of the pleasure. Yet He had a deeper belief than any other in the possibility of recovery, in the existence of an almost undying germ of good. With this double belief He has inspired His Church. She believes in the Fall; that man is "very far gone"² from original righteousness." Yet she speaks the language of a lofty aspiration to the lowest and most fallen. As she reads history, she brings a belief in virtue to the task. We have but to contrast the historians of the Church with the master of epigram, who has written of her origin and first progress in the Roman Empire. For Gibbon, if the servant of Christ has renounced the world, it is because he has found out that he will not succeed in it. For him the virgin is not very pure, nor the saint very holy, nor the martyr very wise.

¹ See St. Mark vii. 22; St. John ii. 24, 25.

² "quam longissime" (Art. ix.), i.e. as far as is possible for a being like man, without being degraded into a brute or sublimed into a devil.

The Church's Master came to make men more human, to endow them with a truer humanity. He appealed to them as men, and gave them credit for some portion of that which He enabled them to develop and enlarge. In this word He seems to say—"I cannot use these hands, cannot raise a cup to My lips, if a cup were here. I know that there is human feeling among you. I thirst."

Some effect was produced. "Some of them that stood by" had said before, "behold, He calleth Elijah. And one ran and filled a sponge full of vinegar, put it on a reed, and gave Him to drink, saying, Let be; let us see whether Elijah cometh to take Him down."¹ If there was something of superficial mockery, compassion was not altogether wanting. The pathos of that death awakened pity, and pity is contagious. But a little after it broke out with irrepressible emotion. "All the multitudes that came together to this sight, when they beheld the things that were done, returned smiting their breasts."² "Jesus saith, I thirst. There was set there a vessel full of vinegar; so they put a sponge full of the vinegar upon the hyssop, and brought it to His mouth.”¹ St. John explains and fills up St. Mark’s narrative.

¹ St. Mark xv. 35, 36.

² St. Luke xxiii. 48.

But there was more than pity abroad. The darkness awed the multitude. An impression was made upon many by the patience, delicacy, courage, dignity, sweetness of the Sufferer. In the Eli cry there were those who had heard for the first time the reality of prayer. Something of Elijah’s character and history was known to the legionaries distorted and exaggerated by tradition. They were not without fear of some manifestation of the prophet of retribution who came on errands of vengeance, and through the rush of rain and the sheet of fire passed like a cloud to the hills. “Let be; let us see whether Elijah cometh to take Him down.” It is frivolous; they jest. But it is tremendous; they tremble. One feels it in their words.²

It would seem from St. John that more than the one mentioned by St. Mark,³ who actually passed the cooling sponge over the dying lips, were the first-fruits of that appeal. So that even its first result was a finer feeling, a readier sympathy, a more instinctive tenderness.

3. The third of the sentences from the cross

¹ St. John xix. 28, 29.

² ἄφετε—ἴδωμεν. St. Mark xv. 36.

³ οἱ δὲ πλήσαντες σπόγγον κ.τ.λ. St. John xix. 29. δραμῶν δὲ εἶς κ.τ.λ. St. Mark xv. 36.

peculiar to St. John is the sixth in order—"it is finished."

This word was already in His heart before it was spoken.¹ The most comprehensive and generalized of these sayings is thus linked to the most special and personal. Let us consider the Divine glory of this.

(a) First, and most obviously, life on earth was finished. "All things are at an end for me"—a Greek dramatist places the words in the lips of a dying man.² And equivalent language is uttered every day. The most commonplace spectators around the cross, if asked by their rough comrades what the dying man had just uttered, would have answered—"he says that all is over." The Christian remembers that it was the one white life among the blurred records of human existence—the only one of which He who lived it could say with truth, "I glorified Thee on the earth, having accomplished the work which Thou gavest Me to do."³

(b) To believers it will be equally obvious to supply "all things written in Scripture." The evangelist—here, as often, the interpreter of the inner mind of the Lord—looks at once into the heart of Scripture and the heart of Jesus.

¹ Cf. εἰδὼς ὁ Ἰησοῦς ὅτι ἤδη πάντα τετέλεσται (v. 28), with τετέλεσται (v. 30). The alteration of "accomplished" (v. 28 A.V.) for "finished" (Ibid. R.V.) is, therefore, very important.

² τέλος ἔχει τὰ πάντα μοι.

³ St. John xvii. 4.

For, throughout that life, all things were done which the law required ;¹ all things were fulfilled which prophecy foretold. Stroke by stroke the picture grew, the crucifix was carved. Often there was merely a hint ; then some seer "learned in sorrow what He gave in song." The fulfilment was shaped out, not on canvas, nor in words and stone : but by the living God in human flesh.² The abrogation too was finished of all that had been tolerated until the coming in of the better dispensation, when imperfections and littlenesses were to be ennobled, rites superseded by the Eucharist, and washings by regeneration.³ All that was typical also was finished by being realized—the four forms of sacrifice by the fourfold fulness of the one offering. All His sufferings too were finished—the sorrow of that loneliness, the shame and pain, the burden of our sins. The promises, too, dim in their magnificence, so often seen by the saints trembling through their tears, were finished. All the promises culminated in this, "he that conquereth shall inherit these things ;" but these things are the "all things" just above.⁴ As for him who walks in some lovely scenery, the mountain and the river, the sunshine and the ¹ Leviticus xxii. 21 ; St. Matthew iii. 15.

² St. Luke xvii. 13 ; xxii. 37. Acts xiii. 29.

³ Colossians ii. 14.

⁴ ὁ νικῶν κληρονομήσει ταῦτα. Ἀποκ. xxi. 7. Cf. καὶ νῦν ποιεῖ πάντα. Ibid. v. 5.

shadow, are things of which he can say—"all this is mine."¹

Such is the Divine glory of Christ as revealed to faith in this word from the cross.

Finally—one incident of the cross, mentioned by all the evangelists, is given by St. John as a conspicuous instance of one of his Leading Ideas. Human language is considered as a witness to the glory of the universal King.

The world-wide importance of this witness is indicated.

An oblong tablet is placed over the cross with the accusation written upon it.² Pilate dimly felt the significance of this. His answer to the chief priest is partly a bitter sneer; but there is in it also an inner feeling of the true royalty of the crucified Nazarene, and a profound conviction that he and they are at that moment "making history." St. John was nearer the cross than the others. It is a fact of our nature that in times of the deepest mental suffering, outward circumstances, apparently of no great importance, are burnt into the memory. We have, therefore, probably in St. John the most accurate version of the words of the Title, and the true order of the language—Hebrew, Latin, Greek.³

¹ 2 Corinthians i. 19, 20.

² St. John xix. 19. "Pilati jussu non manu." (BENGEL.)

³ "Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews." St. John xix. 19. ("ipsissima verba," BENGEL.)—Ἑβραϊστὶ, Ῥωμαῖστὶ, Ἑλληνιστὶ.

Of the three languages, the first was national, the second official, the last the "common" dialect of many races. But there was more than this. There is a general character in language. The first is one of the simplest and most vivid of languages, nearly every verb being a picture. The second is strong and sententious, the language of law and moral satire, yet capable of lyrical sweetness as well as adapted to the

"Wielder of the stateliest measure Ever moulded by the lips of man."

The third has been splendidly characterized as "a musical and golden language, which gives a soul to the objects of sense and a body to the abstractions of philosophy."¹ These languages also have a history. Hebrew is the speech of revelation. Latin has had two histories—the first in the Roman people with their conquest and their jurisprudence; the second in the massive theology, in the sweet and awful hymns of the Latin Church. Greek represents the principle of progress; it is the pollen which has vitalized every flower of thought that lives upon earth.

Thus the three languages represent not only three races, but their qualities and tendencies. Wherever these exist—wherever there is an eye to read, a hand to write, a tongue to speak—the cross has a message, and the King a kingdom. The "Title"¹ is, in St. John's view, the witness of language to the King of the Jews, who is also the King of humanity.

¹ Gibbon.

Thus, by the Divine self-possession so strongly contrasted with human weakness ; by the hushed awe of the Roman Proconsul in the presence of a prisoner, as these few deep words come, grand and brief, as if from the long silence of God ; by the strange royalty of the pathetic form, tricked out in that sad finery, and crowned with that dreadful coronation ; by those unlooked-for fulfilments of type and prophecy ; by the glory of those three last words, which any one, apparently, might have spoken, and yet in which lie folded all suffering, power, and love ; by the heaven and earth keeping guard round the helpless body of the Lamb of God, we behold a glory as of the Only-Begotten. They "crucified the Lord of Glory."

IV

On the whole, in the part of this discussion which bears upon the Leading Ideas of the evangelists in the narrative of the Crucifixion, we have seen the Passion in its sacredness, in its power, in its tenderness, in its glory—the dying Saviour as true, mighty, beautiful, divine—the last words and the death of the Messiah, of the Son of God, of the Son of Man, of the Word made Flesh.

¹ τίτλος.

This fourfold delineation meets the wants of the Church and of humanity.

1. St. Matthew addresses that Hebrew element which will never quite pass away.

The history of the Bible supplies the moral and spiritual corrective to the dazzling pictures of our human history. Its heroes are the selfish and the strong ; its favourite tales are of conquest.

The subject of the first Gospel is the Hero of all time, the Heir of all the ages, of the tragic anguish of the prophecies. Its motto is—"that it might be fulfilled."

2. St. Mark rather responds to a certain Roman element in our race. The Lamb is also the Lion. The cross lifts up a victor. He who was crucified through weakness lives by the power of God. His apparent feebleness was at all times sustained by a reserve of wondrous strength. Of that strength He makes His Church a constant partaker. Work and confirmation is its summary.¹

3. Of St. Luke's connection with the Hellenic temperament we have already spoken at large.

4. St. John answers to the claims of religious reflection, to the wants of those who think as well as pray. The Church must be vertebrate; she needs an organization and a theology. In St. John she finds the great dogmas of the Gospel, the theology of the Incarnation and of the Cross.

¹ τοῦ Κυρίου συνεργοῦντος καὶ τὸν λόγον βεβαιοῦντος. St. Mark xvi. 19, 20.

VII

QUALIFICATIONS OF, AND CONCLUSIONS FROM, THE CONCEPTION OF LEADING IDEAS IN THE GOSPELS

I

WHAT has been said of the Leading Ideas of the evangelists requires to be carefully guarded by one qualification.

If, then, the Leading Idea of one evangelist found no kind of support in any or in all of the other three, his Gospel would incur the gravest suspicion of being ideological, an imaginative essay lying outside the region of fact.

But there is none of the evangelists who has not passages which set forth the Leading Ideas of one or more of the other evangelists as clearly as the Gospel itself in which the Idea is most frequent and obtrusive.

The following instances are in point. (a) St.

Luke's is throughout the Gospel of the call of the Gentiles. Yet the narrative of the star-led Wise Men, the glorious symbol of that call, is peculiar to St. Matthew. The mysterious attraction which drew certain men of the Hellenic race to Jesus just before His crucifixion is recorded by St. John alone.¹ (b) The record of the scientific side of miraculous cures, or of incidents connected with the Saviour's physical organization, finds illustrations in St. Mark and St. John, as well as in St. Luke.² (c) The highest theological conceptions and expressions of the self-consciousness of the God-Man are not exclusively confined to St. John.³ (d) Subtle psychological traits in St. John, whether of our Lord Himself, or of persons mentioned in the Gospel, scarcely yield in interest and importance to those which have caused St. Luke to be termed by modern believing critics "the psychological evangelist."⁴ (e) The peculiar blessings of ¹ St. Matthew ii. 1-12 (cf. viii. 11, 12); St. John xii. 20-37.

² St. Mark viii. 23, 24; St. John xix. 34.

³ St. Matthew xi. 25-30 (especially v. 27), εἰς τοῦτο ἐξῆλθον. St. Mark i. 38; St. John viii. 48; St. Luke x. 21-23.

⁴ Thus the totally different expression given to a blind man's face by the restoration of sight is given with matchless delicacy in St. John ix. 9. Our Lord's superiority to mere passive emotion, even when He submits to it, is conveyed by St. John xi. 33 (ἐτάραξεν ἑαυτόν). Cf. xii. 27, 28. St. Mark iii. 5 (περιβλεψάμενος μετ' ὀργῆς συνλυπούμενος) proves that the second evangelist has some of St. Luke's gifted insight into the mind of Christ. St. Matthew's mode of telling the Baptist's "sending by his disciples" from prison to Jesus, shows that he thoroughly perceived the psychological poverty cannot be termed with any truth "peculiar to the Ebionite Gospel, the heresy of Luke." They are found in the other three evangelists.¹ (f) The fulfilment of Hebrew prophecy is only less close to St. John's heart than to St. Matthew's.²

Thus, whatever is diffused as a Leading Idea over one Gospel is found concentrated as an existing and important Idea in all the other Gospels, or at least in some of them.

paradox of the varying effect of evidence according to subjective conditions, profoundly put by a great poet.

"The mind's repose
On evidence is not to be ensured
By act of naked reason. Moral truth
Is no mechanic structure built by rule,
And which, once built, retains a steadfast shape
And undisturbed proportions ; but a thing
Subject, you deem, to vital accidents,
And, like the water-lily, lives and thrives
Whose root is fixed in stable earth, whose head Floats on the tossing waves."

WORDSWORTH. Excursion. Works, p. 444.

¹ St. Augustine has stated this question with the large good sense that he often exhibits. "Sic suscepit impium divitem cruciatus ignis, ut tamen pium pauperem suscepit sinus divitis (St. Luke xvi. 19-21)." "Ista superbia (1 Tim. vi. 17-19) divitem illum qui contemnebat pauperem justum et ista spes in incerto divitiarum, quae se propter purpuram, byssum et epulas splendidas beatum putabat ; non ipsæ divitiæ perduxerunt ad inferni tormenta."—S. Aug. Epist. clvii. 23-26, opp. tom. ii. 686. Edit. Migne.

² St. John ii. 17 ; vii. 38 ; xii. 38-42 ; xv. 25 ; xviii. 9 ; xix. 24-28, 36, 37.

II

We may take one incident common to all the evangelists as a specimen of the way in which the narratives were moulded by their Leading Ideas—the call of Simon and Andrew, James and John—¹

(1) St. Matthew records it very briefly, apparently mainly as the fulfilment of a prophecy of Isaiah.²

(2) St. Mark's notice is also short. To him the conversions present themselves as noble instances of the attraction of grace, of the resistless magic of that voice.³ Nothing is impossible with God. Yet that two brothers should simultaneously obey a call which involved so much self-sacrifice is no ordinary event. But that another pair of brothers should do so, and leap at the same moment over a mental and moral chasm so vast, constitutes a complex improbability which the ingenuity of a mathematician has set itself to state in the terms of his science.⁴ The modern critical and historical spirit is tempted to see primâ facie indications of the iteration so commonly characteristic of the legends

¹ St. Matthew iv. 18–23; St. Mark i. 16–21; St. Luke v. 1–12; cf. St. John i. 35–43. We speak for convenience of the incident as common to all the evangelists; though, of course, St. John's account is, strictly speaking, not the call itself, but the preparation for it in the case of Andrew and Simon.

² St. Matthew iv. 14–22.

³ St. Mark i. 16–20.

⁴ See the ingenious statement of Mr. Latham, Pastor Pastorum, pp. 196–202.

of the most different countries.¹ But St. Luke, with his keen moral tact, bridges over the chasm by supplying the psychological antecedents of the cases, which, stated barely, might seem strange and even suspicious. There was a previous connection between the pairs of brothers and the Master, as there were business ties between Simon and Andrew, John and James. All four had previously heard some of that great teaching and been brought near to that marvellous personality. They had seen a miracle just of the character to impress minds like theirs. Simon Peter felt the spiritual awe of a decisive beginning, of a resolve which had been slowly maturing, and which was now brought to full ripeness by the fierce light of the spiritual world thrown upon it in a few moments.² St. John (one of whose Leading Ideas is the instinctive historical actuality which balances his unquestionable idealism) clears the way still further. One of the pair of fisher-brothers—intimate and in practical relations with the other—were disciples of long standing. Jesus had long before looked into the very depths of Simon's being with that penetrating and attractive glance.¹ The call, which had been long prepared for, being more than half expected, came at last. All the narratives are true. No one is in any way inconsistent with the others. But the first two evangelists redacted their gospels when much was fresh in the memory of the Church, which was taken for granted and did not need to be written. St. Luke fills in the particulars, and St. John supplies a solid substratum in the earlier part of the evangelical story. Thus all are true. For St. Matthew the obedience of the brethren to a call of such momentous import was, indeed, one individual and most beautiful illustration of the prophetic announcement of the "great light" which was to "spring up" from Galilee of the Gentiles. To St. Mark the incident was another proof of the magnetic and triumphant sweetness, the victrix delectatio which the Conqueror of hearts communicated instantaneously² to the wills of men. St. Luke, the psychological evangelist, indicates that in this, as in all other circumstances, no inch of human nature lies outside the reign of law; that the spark of heavenly grace in this case also sets fire to materials previously provided. St. John, with no immediate view to this incident—from his historical tendency and purpose—has laid a strong foundation of fact under the statements of his predecessors. To us this seems an interesting example of the benefit which arises from a judicious use of the conception of Leading Ideas.

¹ "James and John, the sons of Zebedee, which were partners with Simon" (St. Luke v. 10).

² "But Simon Peter, when he saw it, fell down at Jesus' knees, saying, Depart from me; for I am a sinful man, O Lord. For he was amazed, and all that were with him, at the draught of the fishes which they had taken: and so were also James and John, sons of Zebedee, which were partners with Simon. And Jesus said unto Simon, Fear not; from henceforth thou shalt catch men" (St. Luke v. 8-11).

¹ Ἐμβλέψας αὐτῷ ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν, κ.τ.λ. (St. John i. 43).

² Εὐθέως ἀφέντες τὰ δίκτυα αὐτῶν. (St. Mark i. 18.)

III

With three inferences we may conclude.

A

The first regards the view of the verbal structure of the Gospel which we are forced by truth to take.

I. The "informal character" of these memoirs is brought out by the very nature of the Leading Ideas by which they are pervaded. Our Lord's words are not given, either in their original language (except a few broken words chiefly in St. Mark), nor apparently in a version of them literally and absolutely accurate. The spirit of them is preserved in the highest degree. But we have different versions of the same words with a view to the evangelists' chief purpose. Events are not generally narrated in exact chronological sequence. We cannot help feeling that in some one narrative, one evangelist has more profoundly grasped and more thoroughly co-ordinated the circumstances than the others.¹ Thus, we have not ¹ This, as we have seen, is notably the case with the whole incident of the rich young man, and the words following from it. St. Mark x. 17-38.

one perfect and unbroken record of the earthly life of the Saviour, but four different photographs, "four different projections," which each soul has to reproduce for itself.¹

Are there no minute inaccuracies? Are we forced by preconceived theories to suppose, for instance, that the truth of the Gospel depends upon cramming each of the words in the four titles over the cross, given by the four evangelists, into one connected form, from which no syllable is wanting?

Two principles appear to be certain :

1. The revelation in Holy Scripture is necessarily contained in words and sentences. "The law speaks with the tongue of the children of men." The medium which it employs and the persons whom it addresses are alike imperfect. It must lower what is divine in elevating what is human. It is the approximation of divine thought to human intellect and feeling. It is not, it cannot be, exclusively divine.²

2. But if not exclusively divine, it is so sufficiently for the ends which it contemplates.

As regards the Gospels with which we are now concerned, Jesus founded a Society. The peculiarity of the members of that Society is that they are spiritually like Him ; that His words and works are the rule and model, the very breath of their existence. The life of each true Christian is a small replica, the Church a great one, of His.

¹ This fact, and its moral and spiritual gains, are admirably stated by Mr. Latham. Pastor Pastorum (pp. 16-18).

² See Note at end.

But if (as experience proves) Jesus is not visible and audible; if the Spirit uses Christ's words and deeds as the necessary condition of His action, the Church must have a substantially true and faithful image of His human life, teaching, and conduct. Either the Gospels are in their language and structure inspired and divine sufficiently up to this point and for this purpose; or, if not, this false image would project a false shadow. False Gospels would make a false Church.

But the experience of nineteen centuries proves that the Church has this, and with this, all necessary for it.

The Church has no theory of inspiration.¹ Criticism is perpetually busy; it untwists every thread and fibre of the language of the Gospels. It seeks to read the mystery of their origin. But neither the recognition of Leading Ideas in the evangelists, nor any other result of study, disturbs this result. The Gospels are divine at least up to this point—that they present the Church sufficiently with the earthly life and teaching of her Master.

¹ See Note A, p. 296.

B

Our second inference regards the view of Jesus Christ presented to us by the evangelists through His life, as moulded for us by their Leading Ideas.

There is one current of thought in regard to existence which has come to us primarily perhaps from the East; but which, with Spinoza for its geometrician and Goethe for its prophet and poet, is now in the air we breathe.

Life is a strange and fatal gift. Each human existence is a frail and fleeting apparition. Every successive life is a part of an unending ironical play of illusions, of which each gives a promise which it can never fulfil, and fades away in yet another disappointment. The absolute existence spends itself in filling up time with these ephemeral creations. The solution, we are told, is that this visible world is the only shrine of life and being; that the soul, the world, God, are different aspects of the one solitary existence.¹

¹ This view has been given with the utmost clearness of which it is susceptible by a recent lamented poet.

“The Spirit of the World

Let a sardonic smile

For one short moment wander o’er his lips.

That smile was Heine!—for its earthly hour

The strange guest sparkled; now ’tis passed away.

But in the Gospels is concentrated the manifestation of God made Man to us as personal individual beings. And the description of that manifestation is made more real and personal by the application to it of the Leading Ideas of the evangelists. Thus Christ appeals most effectually to creatures so various in temperament and circumstances—moulded by such different trainings—attracted by such different qualities. Jew or Gentile; the lover of power, of beauty and sympathy, of lofty idealism; the Christ of the evangelists speaks to all. He seems to say to the sons of men—"as I dealt with men and women in the Gospels; as I took

"That was Heine ! and we,
Myriads who live, who have lived,
What are we all but a mood,
A single mood, of the life,
Of the spirit in whom we exist,
Who alone is all things in one.

"Spirit, who fillest us all !
Spirit, who utterest in each
New-coming son of mankind
Such of thy thoughts as thou wilt !
O thou, one of whose moods,
Bitter and strange was the life
Of Heine
Mayst thou a mood more serene,
Happier, have utter'd in mine !
Made it a ray of thy thought,
Made it a beat of thy joy."

(Poems by Matthew Arnold. Second Volume. Heine's Grave.
Pp. 263-266.)

the sick and sinful by the hand ; so ‘ I bring you health and cure, and I will cure you, and I will reveal unto you abundance of peace and truth.’¹ As many were ungrateful then in the days of My flesh,² so is it ever. Yet each one of you separately is dear to Me.”

In this sad world one thing and one only is permanent—one thing and one thing only saves us from the Pantheistic philosophy of despair. Jesus is “yesterday and to-day the same—aye, and unto the ages.”³ The reality of His earthly history is the guarantee of the reality of His heavenly working; and the reality as well as the variety of His earthly history is brought out pre-eminently by the Leading Ideas from which the evangelists have contemplated it.

In truth, the writer of this book at its close seems to have a stronger assurance of the reality of the history in the Evangelists than he had when he began.

For it seems to be undeniable from the Acts of the Apostles that the Church went forth to the world with a definitely moulded oral Gospel anterior to any other which we now possess. This would very early be reduced to a written form,

¹ Jeremiah xxxiii. 6.

² St. Luke ix. 41 ; xvii. 17 ; St. Matthew xxiii. 37.

³ Hebrews xiii. 8. For ὁ αὐτός cf. Hebrews i. 12. Cf. Psalm cii. 27. (LXX.)

and here we should have the common basis ; the common " corpuscula historiæ evangelicæ " undeniably to be found in the synoptical Evangelists.¹

Now, with this common ground of Divine facts and words, three men are found at a very early date who take possession of this fund of common information, and treat it each from his several points of view with a noble and fearless freedom. This intrusion of individual thought and handling must have been prompted by the irresistible preoccupation of the writer, or by his preoccupation with a special public, or by a combination of both motives.

But, if each of these writers had an imperious, irresistible preconception of the character, work, usage, and words of Christ, from whence did he derive it? How was it that he was equipped with a view of Christ, with a knowledge of His life and words distinct from the common fund in the common abbreviated and irreducible minimum of the skeleton-Gospel? Where did he get it? ~

Not from his own imagination. Reverence would have staid his hand. Incapacity would have enfeebled it. The Evangelist would not have invented a Gospel, if he could ; he could not, if he would. To have done so would have proved him to be almost the equal of his subject.

¹ See the " primitive Gospel " in Acts x. 33, 34; cf. supra, pp. 4, sqq.

Thus the study of the Leading Ideas of the Gospels brings us to the most probable, to the only probable solution of the great problem, and leaves us with the only and simple cause full before us. The Evangelists wrote the earthly history of One whom they had known, whom they had seen and heard personally with more or less completeness, and of whom they could learn much from contemporary witnesses and memoirs.

NOTES

NOTE A

NEARLY all that can substantially be said upon this question was said by Cardinal Newman fifty years ago, with that almost prophetic insight into the course of modern religious speculation which he often exhibited. Writing upon a subject at that time scarcely thought of by English theologians, he observed :—

“ In this point of view, we may, without irreverence, speak even of the words of inspired Scripture as imperfect and defective. Inspiration is defective, not in itself, but in consequence of the medium it uses and the beings whom it addresses. It uses human language, and it addresses man ; and neither can man compass, nor can his hundred tongues utter the mysteries of the spiritual world and God’s dealings in this. This vast and intricate scene of things cannot be generalized or represented through or to the mind of man. And inspiration, in undertaking to do so, necessarily lowers what is divine to raise what is human, sooner than we should know nothing. Almighty God has condescended to speak to us, so far as human thought and language will admit, by approximation, in order to give us practical rules for our own conduct. Herein consists one great blessing of the Gospel Covenant, that in Christ’s death and in other parts of the economy, are concentrated, as it were, and so presented to us those attributes and works which fill eternity. And, with a like graciousness, we are also told, in human language, concerning His Son and His Spirit, and concerning His Son's Incarnation."

NEWMAN'S Sermons before the University of Oxford. Sermon xii. 264-266.

NOTE B

St. Luke xxiv. 13-36.

We have here a personal attestation—probably the attestation of St. Luke himself (though that is not necessary for our argument). The question has often been asked whether St. Luke was one of the seventy disciples. Quite clearly he could not have been one of the "eye-witnesses from the beginning," from whom he separates himself in the first sentence of his Gospel. Yet the wide-spread tradition that he was a personal follower, and in some sense a personal disciple of Jesus, must have had some substantial basis. This may well have been the record of the Easter walk to Emmaus.¹

We are entitled to ask how the facts could have been written by any but an eye-witness, or by one who moulded his history from the lips of, or from a document supplied by, an eye-witness?

There are literary no less than physical impossibilities. One is often led to wish that the instructive Introductions prefixed by Sir Walter Scott to some of his novels were as much read as they deserve. In the Introduction to the Monastery Scott confesses the failure of the White Lady of Avenel. He proceeds to assert the inevitable breakdown of "supernatural machinery" in fiction. He seems inclined to except almost alone Ariel, that beautiful creation of Shakespeare's fancy. He might have added that Shakespeare himself is not successful when he advances beyond astral or fairy beings, varying, capricious, inconstant, yet not altogether unkindly. In Hamlet the impression produced by the Ghost upon those who behold him is given with an awful majesty unmatched in human literature ; but the Ghost's own language is by no means equal.¹

¹ St. Luke xxiv. 13-40.

Is it not, then, what we have called a literary impossibility, that the company of Galileans could have supplied a writer thus perfectly and equally at home with the majesty of style of a risen God? More especially so as the writer would not have been sustained by the strong tide of imagination which buoys up the inventor of a happy fiction, but depressed by the leaden weight which a forger drags at his ankles. He would not have been borne by the storm-footed steeds of enthusiasm, but by the dull hoofs which every lie is forced to employ. Indeed, if some forgotten Shakespeare had existed among that simple company, no degree of genius could have enabled him to move securely and gracefully on ranges so high and difficult. No one, therefore, who was not present—supposing that he could have told so naturally about the *feelings*² as well as words and actions of the two—could have invented those inimitable sentences and placed them in the lips of Jesus.

¹ MAR. "Speak to it, Horatio."

HOR. "*What art thou that usurp'st this time of night,
Together with that fair and warlike form
In which the majesty of buried Denmark
Did sometime march?*"

MAR. "*We do it wrong, being so majestic,
To offer it the show of violence.*"

BER. "It was about to speak, when the cock crew."

HOR. "And then it started, like a guilty thing Upon a fearful summons."

The language of the Ghost (Act i. Scene 5) is not maintained throughout at all at the same high level.

² St. Luke xxiv. 32.

NOTE C

Ἰησοῦς προέκοπτεν τῇ σοφίᾳ. St. Luke ii. 52.

We may quote a fine and stately piece of psychology by an eminent living writer.

“The life of Jesus as a boy and youth at Nazareth is told in the words—‘He grew; He obeyed.’¹ There was nothing extraordinary, nothing startling, nothing apparently outside the lines of human nature. He develops physically like other children. He shows, from year to year, the intelligence and the virtues, the grace and the charm which are suitable to His age. No obstacle thwarts this perfect growth. The passions, as they awake, have a tumult and an effervescence which disturb the harmony of every human being. But in the soul of Jesus they are in perfect equilibrium. Evil in any form never even touches the Holy Thing which is born, in whom dwelleth in bodily wise the fulness of God. In Him matter is penetrated by the soul, which sways and transfigures it; and the soul by the Spirit of God, which fills and makes it divine. No psychology can analyse the irradiations of God in the soul of Jesus; no science will ever grasp the beauty of that body vibrating and growing up under the rays and impulses of a soul which the Infinite pervades with His breath and grace. He is the ideal infant and youth, as presently He will be the ideal man. There is this difference between Him and the sons of earth—that the best of us aspire to an ideal perfection which we never reach, whilst He realizes the absolute type. The total Personal union of the human and divine Nature gave Him the intuition of infinite truth, the possession of infinite love, the unbroken enjoyment of infinite beauty; but it did not hinder the development of experimental knowledge in its realm; nor, again, the progressive exercise of virtues, the effort of the will, any more than bodily fatigues, labour, and pain. This is the essential appanage of the earthly man. Jesus willed to have it whole and entire, with its weakness, its misery, and its mortality.

¹ Père Didon. Jésus Christ, lib. i. chap. v. pp. 70-79. On the Adolescence and Youth of Jesus.

His union with God excepted Him from nothing but sin and imperfection. The most different moods could co-exist simultaneously in His soul without mutual exclusion or destruction. His intuition is compatible with experimental knowledge; His divine joys are allied to nameless sufferings, and His most painful struggles to an unalterable serenity."

I

This is the flower of Aquinas, and of Aquinas where he is at his best.

The substance of the teaching of Aquinas upon the God-Man's increase in wisdom seems to be as follows:—

Is there ignorance in Christ?

In the affirmative it may be argued—

1. Christ on earth had what suited the Human, not the Divine Nature, such as suffering and death.

2. One may be called ignorant from any defect of knowledge. And Christ knew not sin (2 Corinthians v. 21).

But the negative is ruled, for—

"Ignorantia per ignorantiam non tollitur." But Christ came to take away our ignorance as well as our sin. As for the last purpose there could be in Him no "fomes peccati," so for the first there could be no ignorance.

As to Christ's Humanity, it may be considered (a) per se—from which point of view it may be looked upon as ignorant and servile, or (b) as united with the Divine Personality, and "full of grace and truth" (St. John i. 14).

So far as ignorance can be predicated of Him, it can only be per experientiam. He knows absolutely per simplicem notitiam. (S. THOM. AQUIN. Pars iii. Quæst. xv. Art. iii. ["Utrum in Christo fuit ignorantia"], Summa Theolog. Tom. iv. pp. 66, 67.)

II

Whether Christ knew all things in regard to infused knowledge?

A double knowledge was impressed on the soul of Christ, each most perfect in its own way. (a) The first exceeded human nature, wherewith He saw the essence of God, and all things in It. This is simply most perfect. (b) There was another knowledge in Christ in a way proportionate to human nature, as He knew things per species. This was not absolutely most perfect, but most perfect relatively to human knowledge.

Obj. "There was in Christ a certain knowledge acquired by experience. But He did not experience all things. Therefore He did not know all things in this way."

But if He was not "omnia expertus"; yet from that which He did experimentally know, He had knowledge of all things.

"Jesus increased in wisdom" (St. Luke ii. 51). Merely human wisdom is wisdom acquired in human methods. "Scientia acquisita crescitur ab intellectu agente qui non simul totum operatur, sed successive. Secundum hanc scientiam Christus non a principio scivit omnia sed paulatim." (Pars iii. Quæst. xii. Tom. ix. § 59.)

"Hæc scientia fuit perfecta secundum tempus; licet non semper fuerit perfecta simpliciter et secundum naturam. Ideo potuit habere augmentum." (Ibid. § 601.) Pars iii. Art. iv. Quæst. xi.

"De scientia indita vel infusa animæ Christi."—Tom. iv. §§ 56-60. D. THOM. Summ. Theolog. cum Comment. Cajetani.

ADDITIONAL NOTES

NOTE A (p. 8).

INDICATIONS OF THE STYLE AND TONE OF ST. LUKE IN THE EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS

THE fact of striking resemblances of style and expression between the Epistle to the Hebrews and the writings of St. Luke has been recognized for ages in the Christian Church.

All the earliest existing authorities attribute the Epistle to St. Paul. But doubts upon the subject begin with the beginnings of criticism. Clement of Alexandria and Origen¹ perceived a certain

¹ The passages in Eusebius run thus: "But the Epistle to the Hebrews [Clement in his Hypotyposes] affirms to be Paul's, but that it was written to Hebrews in the Hebrew language, whilst Luke, covetous of the honour [φιλοτίμως], translated and published it for Greeks. Hence careful examination discovers the same colouring of style in the translated epistle as in the Acts; but that the usual 'Paul Apostle' is not prefixed naturally enough." "For" (says Clement), "in writing an Epistle to Hebrews, who were prejudiced against him and suspected him, he very prudently did not revolt them in the outset by giving his name." Clement then adds a suggestion. "Now then"* (he writes), "as the blessed elder [probab. Pantænus] said, since the Lord, as Apostle of the Most High, was sent to the Hebrews, Paul as having been sent to the Gentiles, through humility does not describe himself as apostle of the Hebrews, both for the sake of giving honour to the Lord, and

* ἤδη δὲ, apparently meeting a fresh difficulty of his day. See WESTCOTT, Epistle to Hebrews, lxvii.

unlikeness to St. Paul's tone and thought. They account for the phenomena by supposing that the Epistle is Pauline but not Paul's. They conjecture that there was possibly a Hebrew original translated into Greek by St. Luke (or by St. Clement of Rome); possibly a joint collaboration, to which St. Paul contributed the argument or general design, while St. Luke or St. Clement put the piece in shape in the Greek language, working freely within the lines indicated by the Apostle.

"The particular criticism of which we are speaking," writes Dr. Vaughan, "has taken no step, certainly no stride, towards finality, since the age of Clement and Origen." (Epistle to Hebrews. Pref. xiii.) Yet we venture to think that this great scholar has under-on account of its seeming a possibly ostentatious superfluity that one who was apostle and herald of the Gentiles should write authoritatively to the Hebrews also." (Euseb. H. E. vi. 14.) [Origen writes] "Every judicious critic of nuances of style must admit that the literary character of the Epistle to the Hebrews does not possess the unmistakable individuality of the apostle, who confessed that he was rude in speech, that is in verbal phrase, while the Epistle is of a higher and purer cast of Hellenic diction. But on the other hand, such a critic knows that the thoughts of the Epistle are of wonderful depth and elevation, and in no way second to the Apostolic writings."

To this Origen afterwards appends: "But I would add my own opinion that the conceptions are those of the Apostle; but the phrase and the literary setting belong to some one putting forth as in a memoir that to which he was prompted by his teacher. If, then, any Church holds the Epistle for Paul's, let that Church be approved even for this; for the ancients did not rashly hand it down as of Paul. But, as to the question who wrote it, God knows the truth of the matter; but the history of it, as it came down to us, was according to some, that Clement, who became Bishop of the Romans, wrote it, but according to others Luke, the author of the Gospel and the Acts." (Euseb. H. E. vi. 25.) This passage of Origen was written after A.D. 245. The opinion of Eusebius himself is against the Lucanian, and for the Clementine origin of the Epistle to the Hebrews. (H. E. iii. 38.)

estimated the evidence produced by Dr. Franz Delitzsch, throughout the Commentary upon the Epistle to the Hebrews, which will probably remain the first authority upon the subject, and especially in the dissertation as to the authorship of the Epistle to the Hebrews. (Comment. on the Hebrews, E.T. Vol. ii. 409-418.)

We proceed to consider the affinities between the acknowledged writings of St. Luke and the Epistle to the Hebrews under three heads.

(i) Resemblances in style, expression, and construction.

(ii) Resemblances in a common substratum of study and habitual thought, manifesting itself in illustrations, and in the form and colour which they assume.

(iii) Resemblances in theological ideas and Christological conception.

I

Resemblances in style, expression, and construction.

These resemblances can only be satisfactorily exhibited by being presented to the eye at length in opposite columns. They are certainly very numerous, when we consider the difference between historical documents and a theological treatise. Instances where words, expressions, and construction are peculiar to the three books in the N.T., are marked with asterisks.

EPISTLE TO HEBREWS

ST. LUKE'S GOSPEL AND ACTS

*διαφορώτερον παρ' αὐτοῦς... ὄνομα (Hebrews i. 4 (cf. iii. 3;
ix. 23; xi. 4; xii. 24).)

*μετόχους. Hebrews i. 9 (cf.
iii. 1, 14; vi. 4; xii. 8).

*παλαιωθήσονται. Hebrews
i. 11 (cf. viii. 13).

*πλέον παρὰ τὸ διατεταγμένον ὑμῖν. St. Luke iii. 13. (The use of παρὰ, after compar., absolutely peculiar in N.T.)

μετόχοις. St. Luke v. 7.

*βαλλάντια μὴ παλαιούμενα.
St. Luke xii. 33.

ἔχρισε. Hebrews i. 11.

χρίεις. St. Luke iv. 18; Acts iv. 27; x. 38. [Only found elsewhere in 2 Cor. i. 21.]

οἰκουμένη. Hebrews i. 6. (St. Luke ii. 1; iv. 5; xxi. 26; Acts xi. 28; xvii. 31; xix. 27; xxiv. 8; Hebrews ii. 8.)

οἰκουμένη. Elsewhere only Matt. xxiv. 14; Rom. x. 18; Apoc. iii. 10; xii. 9; xvi. 14.

τοῖς ἀκουσθεῖσιν (= προσέχειν τὸν νοῦν τινι). Hebrews ii. 1.

προσέχειν τοῖς λαλουμένοις (Acts xvi. 14; cf. Acts viii. 6, 10, 11). “προσέχειν is a favourite word with St. Luke. Paul only uses it in the Past. Epp.” (Delitzsch.)

σημείοις τε καὶ τέρασιν, κ.τ.λ. Hebrews ii. 4.

Acts ii. 19, 22, 43; iv. 30; v. 12; vi. 8; vii. 36; xiv. 3; xv. 12.

Π. ἁγίου μερισμοῖς. Hebrews ii. 4.

Cf. Acts ii. 3.

ὁ τε γὰρ ἁγιάζων καὶ οἱ ἁγιαζόμενον ἐξ ἑνὸς πάντες. Hebrews ii. 11.

Cf. τοῦ Ἀδάμ τοῦ θεοῦ. St. Luke iii. 38.

τοῖς ἀκουσθεῖσιν.

εὐαγγέλιον, nowhere in St. Luke's acknowledged writings (exc. Acts xv. 7; xx. 24, both Pauline). Such paraphrases or synonyms are Lucan.

ὁ δι' ἁγγέλων λαληθεὶς λόγος. Hebrews ii. 2.

ἐλάβετε τὸν νόμον εἰς διαταγὰς ἁγγέλων. Acts vii. 53. [This is Pauline also. Galatians iii. 19. But it may be yet another evidence of the spell which the angelic ministrations exercised over St. Luke. Cf. Acts vii. 30-38.]

τηλικαύτης σωτηρίας. Hebrews ii. 3.

συνεπιμαρτυροῦντος. Hebrews ii. 4.

διεμαρτύρατο. ii. 6.

*τὸν ἀρχηγὸν τῆς σωτηρίας. Hebrews ii. 10; cf. xii. 2.

*κατάπαυσις. Hebrews iii. 11, 18; iv. 1, 3, 5, 10, 11.

Hebrews ii. 17 is throughout Lucan.

(a) ὅθεν in logical sense; iii. 1; vii. 25; viii. 3; ix. 18.

*(b) ὁμοιωθῆναι.

*(c) εἰς τὸ ἰλάσκεσθαι τὰς ἁμαρτίας τοῦ λαοῦ.

(d) κατὰ πάντα.

(e) τὰ πρὸς Θεόν.

*μέτοχοι. Hebrews iii. 1-14; vi. 4; xii. 8.

κατανοήσατε τὸν ἀπ. καὶ ἀρχ. τῆς ὁμολογίας ἡμῶν, iii. 1; x. 24 (= prolonged and searching contemplation).

ὁ λόγος τῆς σωτηρίας ταύτης. Acts xiii. 26. For St. Luke's idea of the Gospel as salvation, cf. St. Luke i. 69, 71, 77; Acts ii. 47; iv. 12, with Hebrews i. 14; ii. 10; v. 9; vi. 9; ix. 28.

Doubly compound verbs of this character are Lucan. Cf. συνεπιτίθεσθαι, Acts xxiv. 9.

St. Luke xvi. 28; Acts ii. 40; viii. 25; x. 42; xviii. 5; xx. 23, 24; xxviii. 23 (rare in St. Paul).

*τὸν ἀρχηγὸν τῆς ζωῆς. Acts iii. 15; v. 31.

*Acts vii. 44.

(a) Acts xxvi. 19 [never in St. Paul's writings].

*(b) οἱ θεοὶ ὁμοιωθέντες ἀνθρώποις. Acts xiv. 11.

(c) ὁ Θεὸς ἰλάσθητί μοι. St. Luke xvii. 13.

(d) Acts xvii. 22.

(e) τὰ πρὸς. St. Luke xiv. 26-32; xix. 42; Acts xxviii. 10.

*St. Luke v. 7.

St. Luke v. 7; vi. 41; xii. 24-27; Acts vii. 32; xi. 6; xxvii. 39.

ἔσμεν εὐηγγελισμένοι (iv. 2, 6, pass. of persons to whom the proclamation is made).

τομώτερος ὑπέρ. Hebrews iv. 12.

*χάριν εὐρεῖν. Hebrews iv. 16.

*Use of τε. Hebrews iv. 12.

*βοήθειαν. Hebrews iv. 16.

*περίκειται ἀσθένειαν. Heb. v. 2.

Hebrews v. 7.

ἀπὸ τῆς εὐλαβείας. Hebrews v. 7 (xii. 28).

(α) ἀπό = "source whence."

*(β) εὐλάβεια.

μετανοίας ἀπὸ νεκρῶν ἔργων. Hebrews vi. 1.

πίστεως ἐπ' θεόν. Ibid.

φερώμεθα. Hebrews vi. 1.

τόν ἐπ' αὐτῆς ἐρχόμενον ὑετόν. Hebrews vi. 7.

*εὐθετον. Ibid.

τὰ ἐχόμενα σωτηρίας. Hebrews vi. 9.

St. Luke vii. 22.

φρονιμώτεροι ὑπέρ. St. Luke xvi. 8.

*St. Luke i. 30; Acts vii. 46.

St. Luke xxiv. 20; Acts xxvi. 20.

*Acts xxvii. 17.

*St. Luke xvii. 2; Acts xxviii. 20.

St. Luke xxii. 39-46.

St. Luke xix. 3; xxiv. 41; Acts xii. 14; xx. 9; xxii. 11.

*εὐλάβεια, εὐλαβεῖσθαι, εὐλαβής. [About 30 times in LXX. Never in N.T. except Hebrews v. 7; xii. 28; xi. 7. St. Luke ii. 25. Acts xxiii. 10; ii. 5; viii. 2; xxii. 12.]

μετανόησον οὖν ἀπὸ τῆς κακίας σου. Acts viii. 22.

ἐπιστεύειν ἐμὲ. Acts ix. 42; xi. 17; xvi. 31; xxii. 9.

Cf. Acts xx. 15, 17.

ὕμβρος ἔρχεται. (St. Luke xii. 54.)

*St. Luke ix. 62; xiv. 35.

ἡ ἐχόμενη = next follows chap. (St. Luke xiii. 33). Acts xx. 15; xxi. 21.

κατ' οὐδενὸς εἶχε μείζονος ὁμόσαι. Hebrews vi. 13. (a) εἶχε — ἔχειν with infin. = "to have wherewith to do an act."
 (b) ὁμόσαι.

*καταφυγόντες. Heb. vi. 18.

*πραγμάτων = facts, actions.
 Heb. vi. 18.

τῆς βουλῆς αὐτοῦ. Hebrews
 vi. 17.

*ὡς ἄγκυραν ἔχομεν τῆς ψυχῆς.
 Hebrews vi. 19.

τοῦ θεοῦ τοῦ ὑπίστου. Hebrews vii. 1.

*πατριάρχης. Hebrews vii. 4. μαρτυρούμενος = "one to whom witness is borne." Hebrews vii.
 8; xi. 2, 4, 39.

*ἱερατεῖαν. Hebrews vii. 5.

*ὁσφύς = "higher and ideal aspect of human generation."
 Hebrews vii. 5, 10.

*συναντᾶν. Hebrews vii.
 1-10.

ὅσιος. Hebrews vii. 23. [Rare
 n N.T.]

*εἰς τὸ παντελές. Hebrews
 vii. 25.

*τελείωσις. Hebrews vii. 11.
 οὐκ ἔχει ἀνάγκην. Hebrews vii.
 27.

(a) St. Luke vii. 42; xii. 4;
 xiv. 14. Acts iv. 14; xxv. 26.
 (b) God's oath. St. Luke i. 73;
 Acts vii. 17.

*Acts xiv. 6.

* St. Luke i. 1; Acts v. 4.

βουλῇ for God's will. St. Luke
 vii. 30. Acts ii. 23; iv. 28; xiii. 36; xx. 27. (Only once thus used by St. Paul. Ephes.
 i. 17.)

*Acts xxvii. 29, 30, 42.

St. Luke viii. 28; Acts xvi. 17.

*Acts ii. 29; vii. 8, 9.

Acts vi. 31, 33; x. 22; xvi. 2;
 xxii. 12.

*St. Luke i. 9.

* Acts ii. 20.

*St. Luke ix. 37; Acts x. 25;
 xx. 22.

Acts ii. 27; xiii. 34, 35.
 [δσιότης. St. Luke i. 75.]

*St. Luke xiii. 1.

*St. Luke i. 45.

St. Luke xiv. 18; xxiii. 17
 (omitted in several MSS.); 1 Corinthians vii. 37, same words but in different sense.

τῆς σκηνῆς τῆς ἀληθινῆς. Hebrews viii. 2.

λατρεύουσιν. Hebrews viii. 5; ix. 9, 14; x. 2; xii. 28; xiii. 10.

*ποιήσεις π. κατὰ τὸν τύπον τ. δειχθέντα, κ.τ.λ. Hebrews viii. 5 (from Exodus xxv. 40; cf. xxv. 9; xxvi. 30, LXX.).

*εἰς τ. π. σκηνὴν εἰσίσαι. Hebrews ix. 6.

*λύτρωσιν. Hebrews ix. 12.

*διὰ τοῦ ἰδίου αἵματος. Hebrews ix. 12; xiii. 12.

*σχεδόν...πάντα. Hebrews ix. 22.

χειροποίητα. Hebrews ix. 24 (cf. v. 11).

νῦν ἐμφανισθῆναι. Hebrews ix. 24 (cf. xi. 14).

*ἀνώτερον. Hebrews x. 8.

*δύναμις εἰς. Hebrews x. 11.

*ὁδὸν πρόσφατον. Hebrews x. 20.

*εἰς παροξυσμὸν ἀγάπης. Hebrews x. 24.

St. Luke xvi. 11. [Only places outside the Johannic group, where ἀληθινός occurs (exc. 1 Thessalonians i. 9).]

St. Luke i. 74; ii. 37; iv. 8; Acts vii. 7-42; xxiv. 14; xxvi. 7; xxvii. 23. [Rare in N.T. outside Lucan group.]

*Acts vii. 44.

*Acts iii. 3; xxi. 18-26.

*St. Luke i. 68; ii. 38 (cf. λυτρωτής, Acts vii. 35). [Always elsewhere ἀπολύτρωσις.]

*Acts xx. 28.

*Acts xiii. 14 (σχεδὸν πᾶσα ἡ πόλις); xix. 26 (σχεδὸν πάσης τῆς Ἀσίας).

Acts vii. 48; xvii. 24. [Peculiarly—not exclusively—Lucan.]

Acts xiii. 15-22; xxiv. 1; xxv. 2, 15 (also in St. Matthew and St. John).

*St. Luke xiv. 10.

*St. Luke v. 17.

Acts xviii. 2.

*Acts xv. 39.

- φοβερὰ τις. Hebrews x. 27. Acts v. 36 ; viii. 9 (rhetorical impressiveness).
- *ὕπαρξιν. Hebrews x. 34. *τὰς ὑπάρξεις ἐπίπρασκον. Acts ii. 45 [with the τῶν ὑπαρχόντων ... κρείσσονα ὑπαρξιν καὶ μένουσαν, Hebrews x. 34; cf. St. Luke xii. 15; xvi. 12, of which it is the echo in language and thought].
- εἰς περιποίησιν ψυχῆς. Hebrews x. 39. Exact correspondence in thought with St. Luke xxi. 19; cf. xvii. 33; xxi. 19 (see Vaughan, Epistle to Hebrews, 209-212).
- τοῦ μὴ ἰδεῖν. Hebrews xi. 5 (x. 7). ["General construction with entire clause = design is peculiar to Luke and Paul." Winer. Pt. iii. § xlv. 4b.] St. Luke ii. 27; v. 7; xxi. 12-22; xxv. 31; Acts iii. 2; xxvi. 18.
- *ἰδεῖν θάνατον. Hebrews xi. 5. *St. Luke ii. 26.
- παρῴκησεν. Hebrews xi. 9. *St. Luke xxiv. 18.
- *μονογενῆ. Hebrews xi. 17. *St. Luke vii. 12; viii. 42; ix. 38. [It is applied to men in the Lucan group only. To the Everlasting Son by St. John only, i. 14-18; iii. 16-18; I St. John iv. 9.]
- *ἄστειον τὸ παιδίον. Hebrews xi. 23. *Acts vii. 20 [also of Moses].
- *τὴν ἐρυθρὰν θάλασσαν. Hebrews xi. 29. *Acts vii. 36.
- *μετ' εἰρήνης. Hebrews xi. 31. *Acts xv. 33.
- *στόματα μαχαίρας. Hebrews xi. 34. *St. Luke xxi. 24.
- *ἡργάσαντο δικαιοσύνην. Hebrews xi. 33. *Acts x. 35.

*ἵνα κρείττονος ἀναστάσεως τύχωσιν. Hebrews xi. 35.

ἀντιλογίαν. Hebrews xii. 3.

τῆς παρακλήσεως ἥτις...διαλέ-γεται, Hebrews xii. 5.

(a) παράκλησις.

(b) διαλέγεσθαι = course of argument mingled with appeal.

ἄνω φύουσα. Hebrews xii.
15 (Deuteronomy xxix. 17).

μετανοίας τόπον...καίπερ μετὰ δακρύων, κ.τ.λ. Hebrews xii.
17; Hebrews xii. 12.

*(a) μετανοίας τόπον.

*(b) μετὰ δακρύων. Hebrews
xii. 17 (v. 7).

*ἔντρομος. Hebrews xii. 21.
[Added by the sacred writer to the ἔκφοβός εἰμι of Deuteronomy
ix. 19 (LXX.).]

μνημ. τῶν ἡγουμένων ὑμῶν, οἵτινες ἐλάλησαν τ. λόγον τ. Θ.
ῶν ἀναθεωροῦντες τὴν ἔκβασιν,
κ.τ.λ., Hebrews xiii. 7.

*(a) ἡγούμενος = spiritual chief.
Hebrews xiii. 7, 17, 24.

(b) ἐλάλησαν τὸν λόγον.

*τυχεῖν...τῆς ἀναστάσεως, κ.τ.λ. St. Luke xx. 35.

σημεῖον ἀντιλεγόμενον. St.
Luke ii. 34.

(a) Acts xiii. 15; xv. 31.

(b) Almost a term tech. of St. Luke in Acts (Acts xvii. 2-17; xviii. 4-19; xix. 8, 9; xx.
7-9; xxiv. 12-25).

φύεν. St. Luke viii. 6, 8.

*(a) τόπον ἀπολογίας. Acts xxv. 16. In this sense exclusively Lucan.

*(b) Acts xx. 31. [The μετὰ δακρύων of Mark ix. 24 is rejected by the best authorities.]
So R.V.

*Acts vii. 32; xvi. 29.

*(a) St. Luke xxii. 26; Acts
xiv. 12; xv. 22.

(b) Acts iv. 31; viii. 25; xi. 19;
xiii. 46; xvi. 6.

(c)* ἀναθεωροῦντες.

(d) ἔκβασις (as issue from life).

ἀνέχεσθε τοῦ λόγου τῆς παρακλήσεως· καὶ γὰρ διὰ βραχέων ἐπέστειλα ὑμῖν. Hebrews xiii. 22.

*ἀνέχεσθε = patient bearing. Gen. Hebrews xiii. 2.

*λόγος παρακλησέως. Ibid.

ἐπέστειλα = information sent by Epistle. Ibid.

ἀπολελυμένον. Hebrews xiii. 23. The word must mean either (a) released from prison; or (b) sent out on mission; or (c) dismissed. All three are Lucan not Pauline.

*οἱ ἀπὸ τῆς Ἰταλίας. Hebrews xiii. 24.

*Ἰταλία. Hebrews xiii. 24. Addenda.

*μετριοπαθεῖν. Hebrews v. 2.

*καίτοι. Hebrews iv. 3.

τὸ Π. τὸ Ἀγ is all but exclusively Lucan. Hebrews iii. 7; ix. 8; x. 15.

(c)* Acts xvii. 12.

(d) Cf. ἔξοδος (St. Luke ix. 3); ἄφιξις (Acts xx. 29), for the idea. [The ἔκβασις of St. Paul belongs to quite another conception. 1 Corinthians x. 13.]

*Acts xviii. 14.

*Acts xiii. 15.

*Acts xv. 20; xxi. 25.

(a) St. Luke xxiii. 16, 17, 18, 20, 22, 25; Acts iii. 13; iv. 21; (b) Acts xiii. 3; (c) Acts xv. 30-33.

For construction cf. Acts x. 23, 28; xii. 12; xvii. 13; xxi. 22.

*Acts xviii. 2; xxvii. 1-6.

*μετρίος is not to be found in the LXX.; in the N.T. also only in Acts xx. 12.

*Acts xiv. 17.

Luke ii. 26; iii. 22; Acts i. 16; v. 3; v. 32; vii. 51; viii. 18; x. 44, 47; xi. 15; xiii. 23, 24; xv. 8; xix. 6; xx. 23, 28; xxi. 11; xxviii. [The only exceptions are Mark xiii. 18; John xiv. 26.]

*οἱ μὲν πλείονες εἰσι. Hebrews vii. 23.

*παντῆες. Hebrews vii. 23.

*παραλελυμένος. Hebrews xii. 12.

*ἀναδεξάμενος. Hebrews xi. 17.

*ἐνοχλεῖν. Hebrews xii. 15.

*πολίτης. Hebrews viii. 11.

*ἀνορθοῦν. Hebrews xii. 12.

*πρόβρωθεν. Hebrews xii. 13.

*ἀπογράφειν. Hebrews xii. 23.

*ἀσάλευτον. Hebrews xii. 28.

*λόγος τῆς παρακλήσεως. Hebrews xiii. 22.

*ἄφεσις alone with ἁμαρτιῶν. Hebrews ix. 22.

*ἔτι δέ, climactic. Hebrews xi. 36.

*ἀλυσιτελής. Hebrews xiii. 17.

πλείονας without genitive or comparative marks by ἥ, in the sense of "a large number," is exclusive Lucan; cf. Acts xiii. 31; xxi. 10; xxiv. 17; xxv. 14; xxvii. 13, 20; xxviii. 23.

*St. Luke xiii. 11.

*St. Luke v. 18, 24. Acts viii. 7; ix. 33.

Acts xxviii. 7.

*St. Luke vi. 18.

*St. Luke xv. 15; xix. 14; Acts xxi. 19; Hebrews viii. 11.

*St. Luke xiii. 13; Acts xv. 16.

*St. Luke xvii. 12.

*St. Luke ii. 1, 3, 5.

*Acts xxvii. 41.

*Acts xiii. 15.

*St. Luke iv. 18.

*St. Luke [xiv. 26; Acts ii. 26.

*λυσιτελεῖ. St. Luke xvii. 2.

Other instances are :—¹

*IV. 8. αὐτοὺς Ἰησοῦς κατέ-παυσεν, and v. 4 and 10.

Acts xiv. 18. μόλις κατέπαυσαν τοὺς ὄχλους.

¹ For many of the following instances the writer is indebted to the Rev. W. K. Hobart, LL.D.

*III. 11. εἰς τὴν κατάπανσίν μου, and III. 18; IV. 1, 3, 5, 10, 11.

Acts vii. 49. τόπος τῆς καταπαύσεώς μου.

*IV. 12, τομώτερος ὑπὲρ.

St. Luke xvi. 8. φρονιμώτεροι ὑπὲρ.

*VII. 5. ἱερατείαν λαμβάνοντες.

St. Luke i. 9. κατὰ τὸ ἔθος τῆς ἱερατείας, and ἐν τῷ ἱερατεύειν αὐτόν. St. Luke i. 8.

*X. 16, and VIII. 10. διατίθεσθαι.

Acts iii. 25; St. Luke xxii. 29.

*VIII. 13. τὸ δὲ παλαιούμενον, and i. 11.

St. Luke xii. 33. βαλάντια μὴ παλαιούμενα.

*XI. 13. πόρρωθεν αὐτὰς ἰδόντες.

St. Luke xvii. 22. οἱ ἔστησαν πόρρωθεν.

*XII. 23. ἀπογεγραμμένων ἐν οὐρανοῖς.

St. Luke ii. 1, 3, 5; and ἀπογραφὴ. St. Luke ii. 2; Acts v. 37.

*XII. 28. βασιλείαν ἀσάλευτον.

Acts xxvi. 41. ἔμεινεν ἀσάλευτος.

*IV. 16. εἰς εὐκαιρον βοήθειαν.

Acts xxvii. 17. βοηθείαις ἐχρῶντο.

*VI. 19. εἰς τὸ ἐσώτερον τοῦ καταπετάσματος.

Acts xvi. 24. εἰς τὴν ἐσωτέραν φυλακὴν.

*X. 29. ἀξιωθήσεται τιμωρίας.

Acts xxii. 5. ἄξιον . . . ἵνα τιμωρηθῶσιν, and xxvi. 11.

*XI. 17. τὰς ἐπαγγελίας ἀναδεξάμενος.

Acts xxviii. 7. ἀναδεξάμενος ἡμᾶς.

XI. 36. μάστιξ = scourging.

Acts xxii. 24.

XIII. 2. ξενίσαντες ἀγγέλους.

Acts xxviii. 7. φιλοφρόνως ἐξένισεν, and x. 6, 18, 23, 32; xvii. 20; xxi. 16.

In 1 Peter iv. 4 and 12 used metaphorically, and the other passage (1 Corinthians xvi. 19) is an addition to the text.

*XI. 29. διέβησαν τὴν ἐρυθρὰν θάλασσαν.

Acts xvi. 9. διαβὰς εἰς Μακεδονίαν, and St. Luke xvi. 26.

*XII. 19. σάλπιγγος ἤχῳ.

Acts ii. 2. ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ἤχος, and St. Luke iv. 37.

XII. 16. ἀπέδετο τὰ πρωτοτόκια.

Acts vii. 9. τὸν Ἰωσήφ ἀπέδοντο, and v. 8.

The only places where ἀποδίδοσθαι in the middle is used, and = to sell.

ἀναθεωρεῖν*, xiii. 7; τελείωσις, vii. 11; ἐπιστέλλειν, xiii. 22; ἔχθές, viii. 8; καίτοι, iv. 3.

XI. 30. ἐπὶ ἑπτὰ ἡμέρας.

ἐφ' ὅσον. St. Matthew ix. 15.

ἐπὶ τὸ πρωτῆ. St. Mark xv. 1.

ἐφ' ὅσον χρόνον ζῆ. Romans vii. 1. ἐφ' ὅσον εἰμί, xi. 13. ἐφ' ὅσον χρόνον ζῆ, I Corinthians vii. 39. ἐφ' ὅσον χρόνον νηπιός ἐστιν, Galatians iv. 1.

2 Peter i. 13, ἐφ' ὅσον εἰμί.

ἐκλείσθη ἐπὶ ἔτη τρία, St. Luke iv. 25; ἐπὶ τὴν αὔριον, x. 35; ἐπὶ χρόνον, xviii. 4. Acts iii. 1, ἐπὶ τὴν ὥραν τῆς προσευχῆς; iv. 5, ἐπὶ τὴν αὔριον συναχθῆναι; xiii. 31, ὥφθη ἐπὶ ἡμέρας πλείους; xvi. 18, ἐποίει ἐπὶ πολλὰς ἡμέρας; xvii. 2, ἐπὶ σάββατα τρία διελέγετο; xviii. 20; ἐπὶ πλείονα χρόνον μεῖναι; xix. 8, ἐπὶ μῆνας τρεῖς διελέγετο; xix. 10, ἐγένετο ἐπὶ ἔτη δύο; xix. 34, ἐπὶ ὥρας δύο κραζόντων; xx. 11, ἐφ' ἱκανόν τε ὀμιλήσας; xxvii. 20, ἐπὶ πλείονας ἡμέρας; xxviii. 6, ἐπὶ πολὺ.

It is after St. Luke's manner to express duration of time by ἐπὶ with the accusative.

*VIII. 1. κεφάλαιον, and Acts xxii. 28.

iv. 7. ὀρίζειν. Six times in St. Luke, only once elsewhere. Romans i. 4.

xi. 10. τεχνίτης, and Acts xix. 24, 38. Once elsewhere. Revelation xviii. 22.

xii. 18. ψηλαφᾶν. St. Luke xxiv. 39; Acts xvii. 27; and I John i. 1.

xi. 34 and XIII. 11-13. παρεμβολή. Six times in Acts, once in Revelation xx. 9.

ix. 26, &c. πάσχειν, with reference to our Lord, is never so used by St. Paul, frequently by St. Luke. Used also by St. Matthew, St. Mark, and St. Peter, but not by St. John.

(I. 1. λαλεῖν. Alford (in his marginal references) says "of divine revelations," ch. ii. 2, 3; iii. 5; v. 5; xi. 18. See also vii. 14; ix. 19; xii. 24, 25. See also St. Luke i. 45, 70; xxiv. 25. Acts iii. 21, 24; vii. 6, 38, 44; viii. 26; x. 7; xxiii. 9. Never in St. Paul.) ἀνακάμπτειν, xi. 15. St. Luke x. 6, Acts xviii. 21, and St. Matthew ii. 12 only.

διαλέγεσθαι, xii. 5. Ten times in Acts, once in St. Matthew, and once in Jude only.

ἐκζητεῖν. Hebrews xi. 6, St. Luke ii. 50, 51, and 1 Peter i. 10 (Acts xv. 17 and Romans iii. 11 being quotations from LXX.).

κυκλοῦν. Hebrews xi. 30, St. Luke xxi. 20, Acts xiv. 20. Once in St. John x. 24, perhaps in Revelation xx. 9.

περιέρχεσθαι, xi. 37. Acts xix. 13, xxviii. 3, and 1 Timothy v. 13.

II

We proceed to point out resemblances between the Epistle to the Hebrews and the two historical treatises of St. Luke in apparently common studies and pursuits, which supply the colouring-matter that tinges illustrations and forms of expression. The professional man is not completely lost in the historian, or even in the theologian.

In St. Luke's admitted writings there are two leading veins, of which one is medical, the other psychological.

A

Traces of medical preparation and knowledge in the Epistle to the Hebrews.

It does not require more than a moderate degree of study to make it evident that the contents of the Epistle to the Hebrews accord with the notion that its author (whoever he may have been) must have had a good share of the medical training of his age.

Delitzsch points out happily that the Epistle contains :

(a) An anatomical passage (iv. 12, 13).

(b) A dietetic passage (v. 12-14).

(c) A therapeutic passage (xii. 11-13).

It must be confessed, however, that this great scholar has given a singularly meagre and unsatisfactory list of particulars to fill in the programme.¹

The kindness of the Rev. W. K. Hobart, LL.D., has supplied the writer with the following list of medical words in the Epistle to the Hebrews. It is no small advantage to have had this task performed by the living scholar who has made the works of the Greek medical school his especial study, and has already carried the comparison between their language and that of St. Luke further than any other critic.

Hebrews iv. 12, τομώτερος ὑπὲρ πᾶσαν μάχαιραν δίστομον, more cutting than every two-edged knife.

μάχαιρα is employed by Homer (Il. xi. 844), μαχαίριον and μαχαίρις by Hippocrates and Galen for the knives used by surgeons. These knives were of various shapes, two-edged as here, μαχαίριον ἄμφηκες (Galen x. 415, Kühn); μαχαίριον πλατύ and πλατύτερον (Hipp. i. 60, 61); στηθοειδὴς μαχαίρις (Hipp. ii. 258); μαχαίρις δξύβελής (Hipp. ii. 259); καμπύλον and εὐθὺ μαχαίριον (Hipp. ii. 703); πρόμηκες μαχαίριον (Galen ii. 682); συριγγοτόμον μαχαίριον (Galen x. 415).

Hebrews iv. 12, καὶ διϊκνούμενος ἄχρι μερισμοῦ ψυχῆς καὶ πνεύματος ἁρμών τε καὶ μυελῶν καὶ κριτικὸς ἐνθυμήσεων καὶ ἐννοιῶν καρδίας.

ἁρμών (ἁρμός, ἡ ἁρμογή καὶ συνάφεια, Etymol. ἁρμογαὶ ἁρμοί, Glossarium, quoted by Wetstein).

This seems to be the only place where ἁρμός is applied to the human body, and its precise meaning in this application may be learned from the technical term ἁρμογή.

Galen defines two kinds of junction of the bones in the human body, as (1) ἄρθρον, articulation; (2) ἁρμογή, union of bones without motion. κατὰ δύο τρόπους σύγκειται ἐν ἡμῖν ὅσα κατὰ ἄρθρον καὶ κατὰ ἁρμογὴν. ἄρθρον ἐστὶν ὅστων κατὰ φύσιν κινουμένων συμβολή. ἁρμογή ἐστὶν ὅστων ἀκίνητουντων κατὰ φύσιν συμβολή, Galen xix. 460.

He again (ii. 734) describes the junction of bones as κατὰ ἄρθρον, articulation, and κατὰ σύμφυσιν, a growing together, so that two bones form one continuous substance. ἔστι δὲ ὁ τρόπος τῆς συνθέσεως

¹ Of medical phrases he notes only νωθρός (v. 11; vi. 12); βρώματα καὶ πόματα (ix. 10, cf. Hippoc. edit. Littré, i. 622; iv. 380). He also observes that ἐπεχείρησαν (St. Luke i. 1. Delitzsch might have added Acts ix. 29; xix. 13) was a favourite word of Greek medical writers. DELITZSCH, Comm. on Ep. to Hebrews, E.T. ii. 145.

αὐτῶν διττὸς κατὰ γένος, ὁ μὲν ἕτερος κατὰ ἄρθρον ὁ δὲ ἕτερος κατὰ σύμφυσιν—τὸ μὲν οὖν ἄρθρον ἐστὶ σύνταξις ὁστῶν φυσικῇ. ἡ δὲ σύμφυσις ἔνωσις ὁστῶν φυσικῇ.

Thus ἄρμωγῇ and σύμφυσις were convertible terms for the cohesion—oneness (ἔνωσις) of two bones as opposed to ἄρθρον, articulation.

The earlier anatomists, as Hippocrates, reckoned many of the bones under ἄρμωγῇ or σύμφυσις, which Galen corrects and places under ἄρθρον (Comment. Hipp. de Articulis, xviii. 460). Modern anatomists place ἄρμωγῇ among some of their subdivisions of articulation, still however retaining the term symphysis, e. g. symphysis of the lower jaw, of the pubis. With respect to the latter, Galen, when giving instruction for the severance of the two bones of which it is composed, advises to endeavour to accurately find the line of union and then cut along this with a strong and large knife. ἐπειδὴ τὰ τῆς ἡβης ὁστὰ συμπεφυκεν ἀλλήλοις διὰ χόνδρου κατὰ τὸ πρόσω μέρος αὐτῶν ἐξευρεῖν ἀκριβῶς πειρῶ τὴν γραμμὴν τῆς συμφύσεως, ἐὰν γὰρ κατ' ἐκείνης τέμνῃς ἰσχυρᾷ καὶ μεγάλῃ σμίλῃ, βραδίως αὐτὰ χωρίσεις ἀλλήλων (Galen ii. 584).

The meaning of ἄρμοι accordingly is not joints in the sense of articulated joints, but joinings—the union of two bones cohering so closely as apparently to form but one, and thus it is applied to joints in masonry.

Wetstein quotes from Philo a passage very similar to this. Ἰνα ἐννοῇς τὸν θεὸν τέμνοντα, τὰς τε τῶν σωμάτων καὶ πραγμάτων ἐξῆς ἀπάσας ἡρμόσθαι καὶ ἡνῶσθαι δοκούσας, φύσεις, τῷ τομῇ τῶν συμπάντων αὐτοῦ λόγῳ. The ἡρμόσθαι καὶ ἡνῶσθαι of Philo is expressed by ἄρμων of the text.

μυελῶν. By the use of the plural the writer would seem to include not merely the marrow of the bones, but also the spinal cord (νωτιαῖος μυελός) and the brain; these latter, though acknowledged to be of a different nature from μυελός, were still so called. Galen vi. 678, ἐπεὶ δ' ὑπὸ τῶν κατὰ τὴν ράχιν ὁστῶν περιέχεται, παραπλήσιος ὢν κατὰ τὴν χροάν μυελῷ, διὰ τοῦτο μυελὸν ὀνομάζουσιν αὐτὸν, ὥσπερ γε καὶ αὐτὸν τὸν ἐγκέφαλον ἔνιοι προσηγόρευσαν ὡσαύτως.

Galen i. 600, οὐ μὴν ὁμοιογενὴς ὁ καθ' ἕκαστον ὁστοῦν μυελὸς ἐγκεφάλῳ τε καὶ νωτιαίῳ. ἀλλ' ἐγκέφαλος μὲν καὶ νωτιαῖος ἐκ ταύτου γένους· οἱ δ' ἄλλοι ξύμπαντες μυελοὶ φύσεως ἐτέρας εἰσὶ.

κριτικός is used as well as κρίσιμος to denote a sign, or a time for judging of disease. κριτικὸν σημεῖον—κριτικὸς καιρός. Galen ix. 806, 807, 808, 809, 810, 811, 826, 828, &c.; Hipp. ii. 86, ἰδρῶτες κριτικοί.

[It may be worth mentioning that μερισμός seems to have been used in philosophic language to denote parts of the ψυχή. Galen (v. 444) quotes Chrysippus as maintaining ἔστι δὲ τῆς ψυχῆς, μέρος, δι' ὧν ὁ ἐν αὐτῇ λόγος συνέστηκε, καὶ ἡ ἐν αὐτοῦ διάθεσις, καὶ ἔστι καλὴ ἢ αἰσχαρὰ ψυχὴ κατὰ τὸ ἡγεμονικὸν μόριον ἔχον οὕτως ἢ οὕτως κατὰ τοὺς οἰκείους μερισμούς, and replies τοίχον μερισμούς ὧ Χρύσιππε, &c.

Hebrews ii. 1. παραρρεῖν is used by Galen for liquids passing the proper channel, in the act of swallowing, and getting into a wrong one, e.g. διὰ τοῦτο κἂν ἔρτου τι μόριον σμικρὸν ἢ τινος ἄλλου τῶν ἐδεσμάτων ἀκόντων ἡμῶν παραδράμη ποτ' εἰς τὸν τοῦ πνεύματος πόρον, ἀναγκαζόμεθα βήττειν, κἂν πινόντων ἡμῶν ἀθρόον τι παραβρῆναι τοῦ πόματος ὁμοίως ἐρεθίζετο καὶ βῆχα προσκαλεῖται. Galen ix. 502. See also iii. 590; v. 719; xii. 899. Similarly of blood and other secretions, iii. 491; ii. 95; xii. 282; ix. 614.

xii. 1. ὄγκος is used by the medical writers for an enlargement of the body or some part of it, e.g. of a tumour, Aretæus 107, 110, 127; of tendons, Galen iii. 73, 74; of the bones, 158; of inflammation, xii. 681; of the bulk of the body and corpulence, iii. 188, 197, 397, 431, 516, 532, 865, &c. Galen mentions this ὄγκος τοῦ σώματος in connection with athletes and the foot-race. καὶ γὰρ δρόμοι ταχεῖς καὶ γυμνάσια τοιαῦτα καὶ σαρκῶν ὄγκον καθαιρεῖ καὶ χυμῶν πλῆθος κενοῖ, xvii. (2) 11. τῆς δὲ τῶν ἀθλητῶν εὐεξίας οὐ μικρὸν τοῦτό ἐστιν ἔγκλημα τὸ περιβάλλεσθαι πειρᾶσθαι μέγεθος ὄγκου κατὰ τὸ σῶμα καὶ δηλονότι καὶ πλῆθος χυμῶν, xvii. (2) 363.

Hebrews xi. 11, εἰς καταβολὴν σπέρματος. This phrase is used in the same way by Galen, e.g. xvii. B. 653 κατὰ τὸν αὐτὸν δὴ τρόπον καὶ τὰ κνούμενα ἐν μὲν τῷ πρώτῳ χρόνῳ τῆς καταβολῆς τοῦ σπέρματος. See also iv. 516 De Sem. τὸ τοῦ ἄρρενος σπέρμα τὸ καταβαλλόμενον εἰς τὰς μήτρας τοῦ θήλεος, and iv. 168, xv. 74, xix. 165.

Hebrews v. 11, vi. 12, νωθρός is much used by Hippocrates, e.g. σφυγμοῖσι νωθοῖσι, i. 252. See i. 172, 174, 256, 263, 326, 346, &c.; he also uses νωρότης, 159, 162, 166, &c.; νωθρίη 179; νωθράδης 236; νωθρεύεσθαι 241.

Hebrews xii. 12. The writer quoting Isaiah xxxv. 3, uses the word ἀνορθοῦν, which is not in the passage in the LXX. Similarly St. Luke (Acts xv. 16), when quoting Amos ix. 11, uses ἀνορθοῦν, which is not in LXX. St. Luke uses it again (St. Luke xiii. 13) in relating the miracle wrought on the woman who had a spirit of infirmity; to describe "her being made straight," ἀνορθοῦν and ὀρθοῦν are employed by medical writers for "to straighten, put into natural position abnormal or dislocated parts of the body."

Other words peculiar to St. Luke and the Epistle to the Hebrews, which were much employed by the medical writers, are ἀπαλλάσσειν, Hebrews ii. 15, St. Luke xii. 58, Acts xix. 12, or ἐνοχλεῖν, Hebrews xii. 15, St. Luke vi. 18.

παρλύεσθαι, Hebrews xii. 12, St. Luke iii. 18, v. 24, Acts viii. 7, ix. 33; παροξυσμός, Hebrews x. 24, Acts xv. 39.

B

The medical evangelist was also a psychologist. The author of the Epistle to the Hebrews has also the same characteristic.

(a)

As regards human thought and character, the whole subjective domain.

E.g. the power of the word in grasping the whole of human nature. (Hebrews iv. 2 = personal apprehension of it; ψυχῆς καὶ πνεύματος... ἐνθυμήσεων καὶ ἐννοιῶν καρδίας (ver. 12); psychology of the spiritual and of a fallen¹ condition (vi. 4, 5, 6); long series of psychological sketches, Hebrews xi. (Esau in xii. 16, 17); the remarkable *ὑπὸ τῶν ἀμαρτωλῶν εἰς ἑαυτούς*² (I Hebrews xii. 4).

As regards the character and mission of our Lord.

The Epistle to the Hebrews enlarges on another line. Luke ii. 52. The peculiar temptation of suffering and sorrow (recognized by Jesus Himself, St. Luke xxii. 28, ἐν τοῖς πειρασμοῖς μου; πεπειραμένον, cf. Acts xx. 19, Hebrews iv. 15); issuing in increased experimental knowledge (ἐμαθεν ἀφ' ᾧ ἐπαθεν, ver. 8); the exquisite balance and adjustment of character (μετριοπαθής, Hebrews v. 2); the pathos of the third evangelist, in his Gospel the weeping painter (St. Luke xxii. 40-46), in his Epistle the weeping theologian. (Hebrews v. 9.) Truly is the pathetic Christ (εἰ παθητὸς ὁ Χ., Acts xxvi. 23) the same in the Gospel and Acts as in Hebrews; He of whom suffering is so often predicated (St. Luke ix. 22; xvii. 25; xxii. 15; xxiv. 26; Acts i. 3; iii. 18; xvii. 3; Hebrews ii. 18; v. 8; ix. 26; xiii. 12).

Once more a conception, absolutely unique in the New Testament, of the function of suffering in perfecting our High Priest is given to us by Himself in the third Gospel only. [τῇ τρίτῃ τελειοῦμαι. St. Luke xiii. 32.] As applied to man—his works, his times, his ways, his qualities—to God's work, decrees, word, it is common enough (e.g. St. John iv. 34; Philippians iii. 12; St. James ii. 22; I St. John ii. 8); but as applied to Christ Himself and His character never, except St. Luke xiii. 33 and Hebrews ii. 10; v. 9; vii. 28. In these passages it means not supply and correction (which underlies καταρτίσαι, Hebrews xiii. 21), but to make consummate according to its nature; to fill in with its appointed career; to ennoble to the utmost. (Cf. Hebrews ii. 10, cf. "without suffering is no man ennobled." ROTHE. Stille Stunden.)

¹ A constant subject of thought to St. Luke. Acts v. 1-11; viii. 18-24.

² No doubt based on Numbers xvi. 38, but involving a profound view of human nature.

III

We briefly advert to resemblances in Christological conceptions and general views of Christian and ecclesiastical life.

A

Christological Conceptions.

It has been observed by one of the most earnest and capable of all modern students of the New Testament that there are two great words perpetually recurring in the Acts, κύριος and οὐρανός.¹

These words do not occur in the Epistle to the Hebrews with at all the same frequency. But their importance is not to be measured by the childish test of counting numbers, but by their emphasis and vitality.

The story of St. Luke's Gospel hastens on to the Ascension,²

¹ BISHOP WORDSWORTH. Introduction to Acts, pp. 4, 5.

² "The Ascension, the pinnacle of St. Luke's Gospel history, is at the same time the point of departure for the history of the Acts. On one side we go up to this summit; on the other we go down from it. Hence the two narratives of this fact. In truth it belongs to both writings—to one as its crown, to the other as its base. The Ascension is the link which connects the two phases of the divine works—that in which Jesus raises Himself from the cradle to the Throne; that in which, from the height of His Throne, He acts upon humanity, creating, sustaining, extending His Church. The Ascension makes an integral part of both one and other." (Comment. sur l'Évangile S. Luc. Godet. Tom. ii. pp. 476, 477.) These sentences, written by one who at the time was not thinking of our Epistle, well bring out the unity of the entire Lucan group.

ἐν τῷ συμπληροῦσθαι τὰς ἡμέρας τῆς ἀναλήψεως αὐτοῦ (St. Luke ix. 51). The Ascension closes the first narrative of the third evangelist, and begins the second. Jesus ascended, Jesus in heaven, is the leading Christological conception of the Epistle to the Hebrews. (ἀρχιερέα μέγαν διεληλυθότα τ. οὐρανούς, "passed through the heavens." Hebrews iv. 4. Cf. vii. 26; ix. 24.) Jesus as our Divine Lord completes the Christological conception. (Note the order of the words in the glorious benediction: τὸν Κύριον ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦν = "Our Lord—Jesus." Hebrews xiii. 21.)¹

B

Ecclesiastical and Christian Life.

1. Christians in the Epistle to the Hebrews and in St. Luke's writings are ἀγιαζόμενοι. The ἀγιαζ. are those who, by continuing acts of faith, are making the work of Christ individually their own. Cf. Hebrews ii. 11; x. 10-14 with Acts xx. 32; xxvi. 18.

2. The theological treatise points back to the ecclesiastical history.² It would render the actual Church-life complete by Confirmation as the consummation of Baptism. The actual Church-life began with this. (Acts viii. 14-17; xix. 2.) The ideal Church-life must never part with it. (Hebrews vi. 2.) The Eucharist is in the one as in the other; dim and veiled at first in the Epistle, more openly at the close. (Acts ii. 42-46; xx. 7. Hebrews vi. 5; x. 22, 25; xiii. 10.)

(a) The Gospel leads up to the fact of the Ascension. (b) The Acts leads down to its historical effect. (c) The Epistle to Hebrews leads up again to its theology.

¹ Let the young student read again and again those few pages which no man but the Bishop of Durham could have written. The Divine Names in the Epistle. Epistle to the Hebrews. WESTCOTT. Pp. 33-35.

² In a different way Hebrews x. 32, 34 may well represent in a summary form Acts iv. 3; iv. 18; v. 18; viii. 1; xi. 19; xii. sqq.; xxi. 27.

3. We have seen that the writer of the third Gospel and of the Acts is angel-haunted. So is the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews. In chapters i., ii. we have the angelology of the Psalms; while (like St. Paul in his Epistle to the Colossians) "he keeps the angels in their place." (i. 4, 13, 14.) He notices that "the law was spoken by angels." (Hebrews ii. 2.) The glory of the company into which we are brought is enhanced by the full frequency, the great assembly of the nation of the angels. (μυριάσιν ἀγγέλων πανηγύρει = "myriads, a πανηγύρις of angels." Hebrews xii. 22, 23.) The expressive hints of St. Luke (xv. 5-10; xvi. 22) are crowned by the fuller information which shows us the hierarchy of angelic spirits doing service for us.¹ (Cf. also Hebrews xiii. 2.)

4. The high endowment of a sense of beauty is evidently the heritage of the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews as of the author of the Gospel. His are vivid and expressive images (iv. 2; vi. 7-19, the anchor, a word so natural for a storm-beaten evangelist); the "bidding the sunbright scenes at distance hail" (πόρρωθεν... ἀσπασόμενοι, xi. 13); the cloud, the amphitheatre, the little discipline of every child's life (xii. 1, 8, 9, 5, 12); sometimes a whole beautiful and tender picture in a single touch: e.g. the ὁδὸς ζωῶσα (x. 20). Our "way" is not a lifeless pavement trodden by the foot of a single priest at long intervals; but a way "living," because one with the living Person of Christ.

In his higher passages we find the equipoise of intellect and emotion: an enthusiasm beyond artificial rhetoric, which never loses itself in the sunlit mists of poetry, nor evaporates in sounding words.²

¹ Has the hint of the three orders or aspects of the earthly ministry being transfigured and ennobled in the angels ever been noticed? Λειτουργικὰ πνεύματα εἰς διακονίαν ἀποστελλόμενα εἰς διακονίαν, κ.τ.λ. (Hebrews i. 14)—priesthood, diaconate, apostolate. Perhaps this may be taken to modify some words of Bishop Westcott. Epistle to Hebrews. P. 384. ("No one of the words which have come to represent the main ideas of Church government is used in it with its limited technical sense.")

² Study Hebrews xii. 22, 25. In xiii. 20, 21, a careful analysis

On the whole, then, we think that the case may fairly be presented as follows :—

(i.) There is quite a flight of words, expressions, and constructions in the Epistle to the Hebrews, commonly (not seldom exclusively) used by St. Luke. After all deductions for a common source in the LXX., or in the current Greek of the Church and of society in that age, the coincidence is, to say the least, remarkable. (ii.) There are in the Epistle to the Hebrews various traces of the results of a medical training, and of psychological power, whether in analysis of modes of thought and feeling, or in delineations of character. These indications also point in the direction of St. Luke. (iii.) To this we may add—(A) Common Christological conceptions, notably of the ascended Christ in heaven. (B) Common notes of ecclesiastical and spiritual life. (1) The Christian life one of continuing sanctification. (2) A life characterized by Confirmation as the complement of Baptism, and by participation in the Holy Eucharist. (3) One in which the angels have a part, and to which (in the entirest subordination as of the finite to the Infinite, of the created to the Uncreated) they afford certain gleams of help and beauty.

To us it seems that, while no demonstration is attainable, the advance of critical study points to some modification of the view advanced by Clement of Alexandria and Origen.¹

will show at least ten great dogmatic or spiritual conceptions in what to a superficial reader may seem but a burst of pious enthusiasm.

¹ It may be well to advert to some hints modestly thrown out by Delitzsch. (a) The ancient canonical position of the Epistle to the Hebrews is immediately after the Epistle to Philemon. By this arrangement, the very last words before the benediction in Philemon are Μάρκος, Ἀρίσταρχος, Δημᾶς, Δοκυκᾶς, οἱ συνεργοί μου (ver. 24). This immediate local juxtaposition of Luke with the Epistle to the Hebrews may have been intended to hint at a more vital, and not merely fortuitous, connection between the evangelist and the Epistle. (b) The alliteration of the opening words of the Epistle [ΠΟΛΥΤΜΕΡΩΣ καὶ ΠΟΛΥΤΡΟΠΩΣ] to the name of the Apostle who exercised some remarkable function in regard to it [Παῦλος] seems to Delitzsch to be much more than accidental. No doubt the practice of “buried

ADDITIONAL NOTE B (p. 147).

Cardinal Newman's delineation of the effect of a first reading of St. Luke's Gospel upon a Greek mind.

THE beauty of St. Luke's Gospel, and its peculiar significance for a Greek mind, has been exhibited with singular grace and tenderness by Cardinal Newman. The Gospel which Cæcilius hands to the Greek girl, Callista, is the Gospel of St. Luke.

"She recurred to the parchment and to the Bishop's words, 'here you will see Who it is that we love,' or words to that effect. She opened it at length and read. It was the writing of a provincial Greek; elegant, however, and marked with that simplicity which was to her taste the elementary idea of a classic author. It was addressed to one Theophilus, and professed to be a carefully digested and verified account of events which had already been attempted by others. She read a few paragraphs, and became interested, and in no long time she was absorbed in the volume. When she had once taken it up, she did not lay it down. It opened a view of a new state and community of things, which only seemed too beautiful to be possible. But not into a new state of things alone, but into the names" was in use at the time. [If this idea is to be adopted, are the ΛΥ in the two words without a hint of a second name?] (c) The Epistle to the Hebrews points at some special connection of the writer with Timothy. (Hebrews xiii. 23.) Now in the Acts of the Apostles, the first use of the first person plural, whereby St. Luke associates himself personally with the narrative, occurs in Acts xvi. 10. [εὐθέως ἐζητήσαμεν...συμβιβάζοντες ὅτι προσκέκληται ἡμᾶς ὁ κ.] But this passage is immediately preceded by the history of Timothy's first connection with St. Paul. [ἰδοὺ μαθητὴς τις ἦν ἐκείνῳ ὀνόματι Τιμόθεος κ.τ.λ. Acts xvi. 1-3.] We naturally infer some special tie between Timothy and St. Luke; and thus yet another link is supplied in the long chain of coincidences which lead us up to the Lucanian authorship of the Epistle to the Hebrews.

presence of One who was simply distinct and removed from anything that she had, in her most imaginative moments, ever depicted to her mind as ideal perfection. Here was that to which her intellect tended, though that intellect could not frame it. It could approve and acknowledge when set before it what it could not originate. Here was He who spoke to her in her conscience ; whose voice she heard, whose Person she was seeking for. That Image sank deep into her—she felt it to be a reality. She said to herself, ‘ This is no poet’s dream ; it is the delineation of a real individual. There is too much truth, and nature, and life, and exactness about it, to be anything else.’ Yet she shrank from it ; it made her feel her own difference from it, and a feeling of humiliation came upon her mind, such as she never had before. She began to despise herself more thoroughly : yet she recollected various passages in the history which reassured her amid her self-abasement, especially that of His tenderness and love for the poor girl at the feast, who would anoint His feet ; and the full tears stood in her eyes, and she fancied she was that sinful child, and that He did not repel her. . . . This volume taught . . . that ever-present happiness and greatness lie in relinquishing what at first sight seemed to promise them ; that the way to power is weakness, the way to success failure, the way to wisdom foolishness, the way to glory dishonour. She saw that there was a higher beauty than that which the order of the natural world revealed, and a deeper peace and calm than that which the exercise, whether of the intellect or of the purest human affection, can supply. She now began to understand that strange, unearthly composure which had struck her in Chione, Agellius, and Cæcilius. Life and death, action and suffering, fortunes and abilities, all had now a new meaning and application. As the skies speak differently to the philosopher and to the peasant, as a book of poems to the imaginative and the cold and narrow intellect, so now she saw her being, her history, her present condition, her future, in a new light, which no one else could share with her. But the ruling sovereign thought of the whole was He who exemplified all this wonderful history in Himself.”

. . . “ She slept sound ; she dreamed—she thought she was no longer in Africa, but in her own Greece, more sunny and bright than before ; but the inhabitants were gone. Its majestic mountains, its rich plains, its expanse of waters, all silent ; no one to converse with, no one to sympathise with. And, as she wandered on and wondered, suddenly its face changed, and its colours were illuminated tenfold by a heavenly glory, and each hue upon the scene was of a beauty she had never known, and seemed strangely to affect all her senses at once, being fragrance and music, as well as light. And there came out of the grottos and glens and woods, and out of the seas, myriads of bright images, whose forms she could not discern ; and these came all around her, and became a sort of scene or landscape, which she could not have described in words, as if it were a world of spirits, not of matter. And, as she gazed, she thought she saw before her, only glorified, her who had been a slave, now arrayed more brilliantly than an oriental queen. . . . As she looked more earnestly the face changed. . . . It had an innocence in its look, and also a tenderness, which bespoke both Maid and Mother. . . . And when she had come close to the gracious figure, there was a fresh change. The face, the features were the same ; but the light of Divinity now seemed to beam through them, and the hair parted, and hung down long on each side of the forehead ; and here was a crown of another fashion from the Lady's round about it, made of what looked like thorns. And the palms of the hands were spread out as if towards her, and there were marks of nails in them. And the vestments had fallen, and there was a deep opening in the side. And as she stood entranced before Him, and motionless, she felt a consciousness that her own palms were pierced like His, and her feet also. And she looked round and saw the likeness of His face and of His wounds upon all that company. And now they were suddenly moving on, and bearing something, or some one, heavenwards ; and they, too, began to sing, and their words seemed to be, ' Rejoice with Me, for I have found My sheep.' They went up through an avenue, or long grotto, with torches of diamonds, and amethysts and sapphires, which lit up its spaces, and made them sparkle. And she tried to look, but could not discover what they were carrying, till she heard a very piercing cry which awoke her.”—Callista: a Sketch of the Third Century. By John Henry Newman. Pp. 202-285, 287-310, 312. These passages seem to us to convey, with subtle tact and beauty, precisely the impression which a cultivated Greek mind—first brought in contact with St. Luke’s Gospel, and with few other opportunities of learning about Christ—might be supposed to form, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. The appearance of the Blessed Virgin (whatever may have lain behind in the gifted author’s own mind) is kept within limits; and is certainly more in accordance with the guidance of St. Luke than of the modern Collyridians of France and Italy. The exquisite close of the passage leads the soul from Mary to Jesus.¹

¹ The restless development of modern Roman Mariolatry is well illustrated in the following passage by a justly celebrated French novelist :—“She raised her eyes to the image of the Blessed Virgin and hardly knew it. The shape that stood formerly in the same spot on the same pedestal held a child in her arms. It had been replaced by another—of one who seemed to forget that she had conceived in her womb, and given a God to man. Crowned with stars, clothed with an azure mantle and a white robe embroidered in gold, this shape seemed set upon displaying her own proper distinct divinity to the universe.”—“Noirs et Rouges.” Victor Cherbuliez. Revue des Deux Mondes. (Tom. xlii. 768, Par. III. chap. xv.)

INDEX

INDEX

A.

ANGELS, 135
 Aquinas, St. Thomas, quoted,
 183, 234
 Aristotle, quoted, 128, 219
 Arnold, Sir Edwin, quoted, 142,
 169, 195
 Arnold, Matthew, quoted, 291
 Art, sacred, 131
 Ascension, the, 133
 Augustine, St., quoted, 65, 155

B.

BAPTIST, John, character of, in
 St. John, 217
 Beauty, Aristotle's definition of, 128 in religious worship, 144
 Bengel, quoted, 150, 152, 162,
 163, 247
 Bossuet, quoted, 260 (note 2)
 Broglie (duc de), quoted, 192

C.

CATACOMBS, importance of, in their bearing upon the Saviour's teaching on riches, 176
 Cherbuliez, quoted, 328
 Christ, beauty of, 130 life of, 6 personal appearance of, 141 human knowledge, 234, 297
 -299

Christ—continued.

bodily suffering of, 268
 Humanity of, 271
 the "Strong Son of God"
 in St. Mark, 63
 the worker, 71
 discourses of, in St. John, 193 style and language in St.
 John, 196, 200
 wrote nothing, 209-211
 Chrysost., S. Joann., quoted, 216
 Cleopas, 88 (note 2)
 Colossæ, medical school at, 105
 (note 3)
 Common element in Gospels, 73
 Communism (so called) of St.
 Luke, 175
 Conquest, a leading idea of St.
 John, 231
 Contrasts, silent, in St. Luke, 115
 Copleston (Bishop), 190
 Covetousness, its meaning, stigmatized in St. Luke, 172
 Creatures, the four in Ezekiel—
 Modern view of, 14
 Rabbinical and other interpretations of, 13
 Cross, inscription over, 277

D.

DELITZSCH, on medical language of Ep. to Hebrews, 316; view of possible connection of St.
 Luke with Ep. to Hebrews,
 321

Demoniacal possession, 106, 125
 Didon (Père), quoted, 152
 Dreams in St. Matthew's Gospel,
 , 50, 239, 240

E.

EBIONITISM, alleged, of St.
 Luke's Gospel, discussed, 164-
 181

Epiphany, historical character of the narrative of—(a) No exaggeration contrasted with
 St. Ignatius, 48; (b) Abstinence from claim of prophetic anticipation, 49

Epistles, particular events in Gospels recorded or illustrated in, 35-40

Eucharist, institution of, 96 (note
 2)

Evangelium Marcionis, 123

Ewald on the Gospel of St. Mark,
 68 (note 5)

Ezekiel, referred to, 1, 12

F.

FARRAR, Archdeacon, 237

Formalism of the Pharisees condemned in St. Matthew, 44

G.

GOETHE, his theory of life spiritual, 291

Gospel, definition of a, 1

Gospels, the four, fill up the summary heading of the primitive Gospel given by St. Peter (Acts x. 34-44)— style of, 18

dates, 34

to whom addressed, 271

informal memoirs, 288

human element in, 289

H.

HEALING, miracles of; mode of,
 124, 125

Hebrew language not essentially socialistic, 180, 181

Hebrews, Epistle to the, traces of St. Luke's style and thought, 300-321 medical language of, 316 psychology of, 316

I.

IGNATIUS, quoted, 19, 119

Incarnation, the, 10, 183

(1) Its physical reality, (2)
 Its historical reality, (3)
 Its universality, (4) Joy- fulness, (5) Beauty, 148-163

Inspiration, 294

Irony, peculiar, of St. John, 224

J.

JERUSALEM, prophecy of the fall of, 97

John (St.), his delineation of character, 212

Gospel of, Leading Ideas,
 184, 188, 263

Miracles recorded in, 188, 189

style of, 200

Epistles of, comparison between their style and that of the Gospel, 196

L.

LADD, Professor, cited, 127
 (note C)

Lange, quoted, Preface xi, 208
 (note 2), 237 sqq.

Latham, Pastor Pastorum, quoted, 138, 285, 289

Latin words in St. Mark, 62

Laud, character of, in Heylin and in his own writings, 16

Lightfoot, Bishop, quoted, 48,
 119, 205

Logos, the 186 (note 2), 196

Luke, St., probably native of Antioch, 85

Luke, St.—continued.

- probable association with our Lord, 86
- a physician, 103
- Leading Ideas of, 89
- miracles peculiar to, 105 (note 1)
- historical accuracy of, 155 (importance of the, note 1)
- Lotze on temperament illustrates St. Luke, 127 (note C)

M.

- MARK, ST., Gospel of—
 - Leading Ideas of, 60
 - style, 51
 - object, 62
 - vividness, 51
 - personal traits of our Lord, 55
 - consistency of detail, 57
 - sayings, doings, incidents peculiar to, 66-70
 - relation to St. Matthew's Gospel, 75
 - lessons from, 77
- Matthew, St., Gospel of—
 - Leading Ideas of, 21
 - authorship, 41
 - first miracle recorded, 26
 - gospel of consummated prophecy, 6, 24
- Miracles, Greek equivalent for, 36 (note 4), 227 (note 2)

N.

- NAZARENE, 24 (note 4)
- Newman, Cardinal, 296, 325
- Nukh* (see Conquest), note 231

P.

- PARABLES, 192
 - not drawn out at length but compressed in St. John, 193

Passion, narrative of—

- in St. Matthew, 237
- in St. Mark, 245
- in St. Luke, 255
- in St. John, 262
- Peter (St.), call of, 285
 - his summary of a Gospel, 4
- Petrine traces in St. Mark, 57
- Physician, position of, in Roman empire, 105
- Possession, modern cases illustrating, 125-127
- Poverty, 168
 - M. Renan's mistake about Hebrew significance of, 171, 172
- Prayer, prominence given to, in St. Luke, 98, 117
- Procula, 239
- Psychological Research Society, 125, 126
- Psychology of St. Luke, 107, 127

Q.

- QUINTILIAN, M. F., quoted in reference to slaves being emancipated in order to study medicine, 105 (note 3)

R.

- RENAN (M.), 180
 - on the miracles of our Lord, 124
- Retirements of Jesus, in St. Mark, 61; in St. Luke, 119-121
- Réville (M.), quoted, 42, 44
- Riches, use of, 173, 174
- Roman element in humanity, St. Mark's Gospel addressed to, 62, 63
- Ruler, the rich young, 165, 166

S.

- SACRAMENTS, institution of, omitted in St. John, 204
- Schenkel, quoted, 40, 56
 - on our Lord's miracles of healing, 124

Scherer (M.), spiritual history of,
145

Sentimentalism discountenanced in St. Luke's Gospel, 110, 111

Shakespeare, quoted, Preface xi,
115; instinctive feeling of Hellenism, 135; see also 146,
172

Silence—passive side of Christ's life referred to by St. Luke, 119

Socrates in Plato and in Xenophon, 16

T.

TEMPERAMENTS, theory of, 127
(note C)

Theory as applied by St. John to the life of Christ: how stated by Renan, 183 principle of Aquinas, 183

(note 1)

possible misapprehension of term, 184 (note 1)

Title, the, on the cross, 278, 279

Tübingen, view of the authorship of St. Mark, 73

U.

UNIVERSALITY of the Gospel, 93

V.

VIRGIN, the Blessed, 113, 266, 267

W.

WATER, in St. John's Gospel,
205-208

"We" sections in the Acts, 84
(note 1)

Wealth, dangers of, 169

Westcott, Bishop, quoted, 114,
227, 302, 322

Witness, idea of human, to Christ
in St. John, 222-224

St. John's Gospel a gospel of witnesses to Christ—(a) Human, (b) Divine, (c) of Miracles, (d) of Himself, 224-232

Woman, character of, in St.
Luke's Gospel, 113-116

Word, the, 185-187, 186 (note 2)

Words, seven last, 249, 257, 265

Wordsworth, William, quoted
110, 136 (note 1)

character of Greek mythology, 143, 284 (note 4, on the effect of subjective conditions upon moral evidence)

THE END

February 1898

A Catalogue
of Theological Works

published by

Macmillan & Co., Ltd.

St. Martin's Street

London, W.C.

Biblical History—continued.

CHILDREN'S TREASURY OF BIBLE STORIES. By Mrs. H. GASKOIN. Pott 8vo. 1s. each. Part I. Old Testament; II. New Testament; III. Three Apostles.

THE NATIONS AROUND ISRAEL. By A. KEARY. Cr. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

HISTORY, PROPHECY, AND THE MONUMENTS, OR, ISRAEL AND THE NATIONS. By Prof. J. F. M'CURDY. 8vo. 14s. net each. Vol. I. To the Downfall of Samaria. Vol. II. To the Fall of Nineveh. [Vol. III. in the Press.]

AMERICAN HISTORICAL REVIEW.—"His method is to interweave the histories of the connected peoples in each period, to point out the historical presuppositions and moral principles in the prophetic writings, and to treat the social constitution in separate sections. This method has obvious advantages in the hands of a competent scholar and good writer, and is employed by Mr. M'Curdy with excellent effect. His presentation of the material is admirable in arrangement; his style, though somewhat formal and Gibbonesque, is clear and picturesque."

TIMES.—"A learned treatise on the ancient history of the Semitic peoples as interpreted by the new light obtained from the modern study of their monuments."

EXPOSITORY TIMES.—"The work is very able and very welcome. . . . It will take the place of all existing histories of these nations."

A CLASS-BOOK OF OLD TESTAMENT HISTORY. By Rev. Canon MACLEAR. With Four Maps. Pott 8vo. 4s. 6d.

A CLASS-BOOK OF NEW TESTAMENT HISTORY. Including the connection of the Old and New Testament. By the same. Pott 8vo. 5s. 6d.

A SHILLING BOOK OF OLD TESTAMENT HISTORY. By the same. Pott 8vo. 1s.

A SHILLING BOOK OF NEW TESTAMENT HISTORY. By the same. Pott 8vo. 1s.

THE BIBLE FOR HOME READING. Edited, with Comments and Reflections for the use of Jewish Parents and Children, by C. G. MONTEFIORE. Part I. TO THE SECOND VISIT OF NEHEMIAH TO JERUSALEM. 2nd Edition. Extra Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d. net.

[Part II. in the Press.]

JEWISH CHRONICLE.—"By this remarkable work Mr. Claude Montefiore has put the seal on his reputation. He has placed himself securely in the front rank of contemporary teachers of religion. He has produced at once a most original, a most instructive, and almost spiritual treatise, which will long leave its ennobling mark on Jewish religious thought in England. . . . Though the term 'epoch-making' is often misapplied, we do not hesitate to apply it on this occasion. We cannot but believe that a new era may dawn in the interest shown by Jews in the Bible."

THE OLD TESTAMENT

SCRIPTURE READINGS FOR SCHOOLS AND FAMILIES. By C. M. YONGE. Globe 8vo. 1s. 6d. each; also with comments. 3s. 6d. each.—First Series: GENESIS TO DEUTERONOMY.—Second Series: JOSHUA TO SOLOMON.—Third Series: KINGS AND THE PROPHETS.—Fourth Series: THE GOSPEL TIMES.—Fifth Series: APOSTOLIC TIMES.

The Old Testament—continued.

THE DIVINE LIBRARY OF THE OLD TESTAMENT. Its Origin, Preservation, Inspiration, and Permanent Value. By Rev. A. F. KIRKPATRICK, B.D. Crown 8vo. 3s. net.

TIMES.—"An eloquent and temperate plea for the critical study of the Scriptures."

SCOTTISH LEADER.—"A little book which ought to do good service as a really useful introduction to any study of the literature of this subject."

GLASGOW HERALD.—"Professor Kirkpatrick approaches his delicate subject in a free and yet reverent spirit."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"An excellent introduction to the modern view of the Old Testament. . . . The learned author is a genuine critic. . . . He expounds clearly what has been recently called the 'Analytic' treatment of the books of the Old Testament, and generally adopts its results. . . . The volume is admirably suited to fulfil its purpose of familiarising the minds of earnest Bible readers with the work which Biblical criticism is now doing."

THE DOCTRINE OF THE PROPHETS. Warburtonian Lectures 1886-1890. By Rev. A. F. KIRKPATRICK, B.D. 2nd Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.

SCOTSMAN.—"This volume gives us the result of ripe scholarship and competent learning in a very attractive form. It is written simply, clearly, and eloquently; and it invests the subject of which it treats with a vivid and vital interest which will commend it to the reader of general intelligence, as well as to those who are more especially occupied with such studies."

GLASGOW HERALD.—"Professor Kirkpatrick's book will be found of great value for purposes of study."

BOOKMAN.—"As a summary of the main results of recent investigation, and as a thoughtful appreciation of both the human and divine sides of the prophets' work and message, it is worth the attention of all Bible students."

WESTMINSTER REVIEW.—"An important contribution to the new school of Biblical theology."

SCOTTISH GUARDIAN.—"We heartily commend this learned volume to every teacher and preacher who wishes to study the life, times, and works of the Old Testament prophets."

THE PATRIARCHS AND LAWGIVERS OF THE OLD TESTAMENT. By FREDERICK DENISON MAURICE. New Edition. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

THE PROPHETS AND KINGS OF THE OLD TESTAMENT. By the same. New Edition. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

THE CANON OF THE OLD TESTAMENT. An Essay on the Growth and Formation of the Hebrew Canon of Scripture. By Rev. Prof. H. E. RYLE. 2nd Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.

This edition has been carefully revised throughout, but only two substantial changes have been found necessary. An Appendix has been added to Chapter IV., dealing with the subject of the Samaritan version of the Pentateuch; and Excursus C (dealing with the Hebrew Scriptures) has been completely re-written on the strength of valuable material kindly supplied to the author by Dr. Ginsburg.

EXPOSITOR.—"Scholars are indebted to Professor Ryle for having given them for the first time a complete and trustworthy history of the Old Testament Canon."

EXPOSITORY TIMES.—"He rightly claims that his book possesses that most English of virtues—it may be read throughout. . . . An extensive and minute research lies concealed under a most fresh and flexible English style."

GUARDIAN.—"A valuable contribution to an important and perplexing question. It will serve as a good starting-point for further investigation, and those who are interested in Old Testament studies cannot afford to neglect it."

The Old Testament—continued.

THE MYTHS OF ISRAEL. THE ANCIENT BOOK OF GENESIS. WITH ANALYSIS AND EXPLANATION OF ITS COMPOSITION. By AMOS KIDDER FISKE, Author of "The Jewish Scriptures," etc. Crown 8vo. 6s.

SCOTSMAN.—"Few impartial readers of the book could doubt that its study must serve to promote an enlightened understanding of the texts which it explains."

THE EARLY NARRATIVES OF GENESIS. By Rev. Prof. H. E. RYLE. Cr. 8vo. 3s. net.

PHILO AND HOLY SCRIPTURE, OR THE QUOTATIONS OF PHILO FROM THE BOOKS OF THE OLD TESTAMENT. With Introd. and Notes by Prof. H. E. RYLE. Cr. 8vo. 10s. net.

In the present work the attempt has been made to collect, arrange in order, and for the first time print in full all the actual quotations from the books of the Old Testament to be found in Philo's writings, and a few of his paraphrases. For the purpose of giving general assistance to students Dr. Ryle has added footnotes, dealing principally with the text of Philo's quotations compared with that of the Septuagint; and in the introduction he has endeavoured to explain Philo's attitude towards Holy Scripture, and the character of the variations of his text from that of the Septuagint.

TIMES.—"This book will be found by students to be a very useful supplement and companion to the learned Dr. Drummond's important work, Philo Judæus."

The Pentateuch—

AN HISTORICO-CRITICAL INQUIRY INTO THE ORIGIN AND COMPOSITION OF THE HEXATEUCH (PENTATEUCH AND BOOK OF JOSHUA). By Prof. A. KUENEN. Translated by PHILIP H. WICKSTEED, M.A. 8vo. 14s.

The Psalms—

THE PSALMS CHRONOLOGICALLY ARRANGED. An Amended Version, with Historical Introductions and Explanatory Notes. By Four Friends. New Edition. Crown 8vo. 5s. net.

SPECTATOR.—"One of the most instructive and valuable books that has been published for many years. It gives the Psalms a perfectly fresh setting, adds a new power of vision to the grandest poetry of nature ever produced, a new depth of lyrical pathos to the poetry of national joy, sorrow, and hope, and a new intensity of spiritual light to the divine subject of every ejaculation of praise and every invocation of want. We have given but imperfect illustrations of the new beauty and light which the translators pour upon the most perfect devotional poetry of any day or nation, and which they pour on it in almost every page, by the scholarship and perfect taste with which they have executed their work. We can only say that their version deserves to live long and to pass through many editions."

GOLDEN TREASURY PSALTER. The Student's Edition. Being an Edition with briefer Notes of "The Psalms Chronologically Arranged by Four Friends." Pott 8vo. 2s. 6d. net.

THE PSALMS. With Introductions and Critical Notes. By A. C. JENNINGS, M.A., and W. H. LOWE, M.A. In 2 vols. 2nd Edition. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d. each.

Isaiah—

ISAIAH XL.—LXVI. With the Shorter Prophecies allied to it. By MATTHEW ARNOLD. With Notes. Crown 8vo. 5s.

Isaiah—continued.

A BIBLE-READING FOR SCHOOLS. The Great Prophecy of Israel's Restoration (Isaiah xl.-lxvi.) Arranged and Edited for Young Learners. By the same. 4th Edition. Pott 8vo. 1s.

Zechariah—

THE HEBREW STUDENT'S COMMENTARY ON ZECHARIAH, Hebrew and LXX. By W. H. LOWE, M.A. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

THE NEW TESTAMENT

THE AKHMIM FRAGMENT OF THE APOCRYPHAL GOSPEL OF ST. PETER. By H. B. SWETE, D.D. 8vo. 5s. net.

GUARDIAN.—"Cambridge may claim the honour not only of having communicated without delay the new discovery to the general public, but also of having furnished scholars with the most complete and sober account of the contents, character, and date of the Gospel of Peter that has yet appeared."

EXPOSITORY TIMES.—"It is an edition complete in all respects, full to overflowing, accurate, and serviceable."

THE SOTERIOLOGY OF THE NEW TESTAMENT. By W. P. DU BOSE, M.A. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

THE MESSAGES OF THE BOOKS. Being Discourses and Notes on the Books of the New Testament. By Dean FARRAR. 8vo. 14s.

ON A FRESH REVISION OF THE ENGLISH NEW TESTAMENT. With an Appendix on the last Petition of the Lord's Prayer. By Bishop LIGHTFOOT. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

DISSERTATIONS ON THE APOSTOLIC AGE. By Bishop LIGHTFOOT. 8vo. 14s.

THE UNITY OF THE NEW TESTAMENT. By F. D. MAURICE. 2nd Edition. 2 vols. Crown 8vo. 12s.

A GENERAL SURVEY OF THE HISTORY OF THE CANON OF THE NEW TESTAMENT DURING THE FIRST FOUR CENTURIES. By Right Rev. Bishop WESTCOTT. 7th Edition. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN THE ORIGINAL GREEK. The Text revised by Bishop WESTCOTT, D.D., and Prof. F. J. A. HORT, D.D. 2 vols. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d. each.—Vol. I. Text; II. Introduction and Appendix.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN THE ORIGINAL GREEK. Text Revised by Bishop Westcott, D.D., and F. J. A. HORT, D.D. Library Edition. 8vo. 10s. net.

[The Text in Macmillan Greek Type.]

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN THE ORIGINAL GREEK, for Schools. The Text revised by Bishop WESTCOTT, D.D., and F. J. A. HORT, D.D. 12mo, cloth, 4s. 6d.; Pott 8vo, roan, red edges, 5s. 6d.; morocco, gilt edges, 6s. 6d.

GREEK-ENGLISH LEXICON TO THE NEW TESTAMENT. By W. J. HICKIE, M.A. Pott 8vo. 3s.

ACADEMY.—"We can cordially recommend this as a very handy little volume compiled on sound principles."

The New Testament—continued.

GRAMMAR OF NEW TESTAMENT GREEK. By Prof. F. BLASS, University of Halle. Authorised English Translation. 8vo. [In the Press.]

THE GOSPELS—

PHILOLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS ON THE GOSPELS AND THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES. By Prof. F. BLASS. Crown 8vo. [In the Press.]

THE SYRO-LATIN TEXT OF THE GOSPELS. By the Rev. FREDERIC HENRY CHASE, D.D. 8vo. 7s. 6d. net.

Dr. Chase, in his preface, thus explains the object of his book: "The present volume is the sequel of an Essay which I published two years ago on the Old Syriac Element in the Text of Codex Bezae. The latter, primarily an offshoot of a larger work on the Acts on which I am engaged, dealt with the Bezan text of that Book. Several critics, whose opinion I respect, urged against my conclusions the not unnatural objection, which I had fully anticipated in the preface, that I could produce no direct evidence for an old Syriac text of the Acts. Convinced that assimilation to Old Syriac texts was a predominant factor in the genesis of the Bezan and of cognate texts, I felt that it was almost a matter of honour to extend the investigation to the Gospels, where ample evidence for Old Syriac readings is supplied by the Sinaitic and Curetonian MSS., by the Arabic Tatian, by Ephrem's Commentary on the Diatessaron, and by Aphraat's Quotations."

TIMES.—"An important and scholarly contribution to New Testament criticism."

THE COMMON TRADITION OF THE SYNOPTIC GOSPELS, in the Text of the Revised Version. By Rev. E. A. ABBOTT and W. G. RUSHBROOKE. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

SYNOPTICON: An Exposition of the Common Matter of the Synoptic Gospels. By W. G. RUSHBROOKE. Printed in Colours. 4to. 35s. Indispensable to a Theological Student.

INTRODUCTION TO THE STUDY OF THE FOUR GOSPELS. By Right Rev. Bishop WESTCOTT. 8th Ed. Cr. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

A SYNOPSIS OF THE GOSPELS IN GREEK AFTER THE WESTCOTT AND HORT TEXT. By Rev. ARTHUR WRIGHT, M.A. Demy 4to. 6s. net.

TIMES.—"Will be a convenient help to many beginners in the critical study of the Gospels."

THE COMPOSITION OF THE FOUR GOSPELS. By Rev. ARTHUR WRIGHT. Crown 8vo. 5s.

CAMBRIDGE REVIEW.—"The wonderful force and freshness which we find on every page of the book. There is no sign of hastiness. All seems to be the outcome of years of reverent thought, now brought to light in the clearest, most telling way. . . . The book will hardly go unchallenged by the different schools of thought, but all will agree in gratitude at least for its vigour and reality; and there is one short chapter, 'On the Inspiration of the Gospels,' which even those whom 'criticism' bores will read—which most will read and read and re-read, for it brings new assurance with it."

THE LEADING IDEAS OF THE GOSPELS. By W. ALEXANDER, D.D. Oxon., LL.D. Dublin, D.C.L. Oxon., Archbishop of Armagh, and Lord Primate of All Ireland. New Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Crown 8vo. 6s.

SCOTSMAN.—"The work has in this issue been so altered in revisal and so greatly enlarged as to be a new book, in which the doctrine formerly set forth in a series of sermons has been developed into a well-reasoned theological treatise."

The Gospels—continued.

EXPOSITORY TIMES.—"A delightful suggestion, worked out with skill and ever new suggestiveness by the fertile mind into which it had fallen."

METHODIST RECORDER.—"Not only eloquent and fascinating, but at almost every page it provokes thought."

BRITISH WEEKLY.—"Really a new book. It sets before the reader with delicacy of thought and felicity of language the distinguishing characteristics of the several gospels. It is delightful reading. . . . Religious literature does not often furnish a book which may so confidently be recommended."

MANCHESTER EXAMINER.—"Lucid and scholarly . . . characterised by much originality of thought."

Gospel of St. Matthew—

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO ST. MATTHEW. Greek Text as Revised by Bishop WESTCOTT and Dr. HORT. With Introduction and Notes by Rev. A. SLOMAN, M.A. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"It is sound and helpful, and the brief introduction on Hellenistic Greek is particularly good."

SCHOOLMASTER.—"This is just the book to put into the hands of boys whose teacher purposes to read with them the Greek of St. Matthew's Gospel. The introductions discuss difficulties in a familiar style, and are not beyond the capacity of the average school-boy. . . ."

Gospel of St. Mark—

THE GREEK TEXT. With Introduction and Notes. By Rev. H. B. SWETE, D.D., Regius Professor of Divinity in the University of Cambridge. 8vo. [In the Press.]

SCHOOL READINGS IN THE GREEK TESTAMENT. Being the Outlines of the Life of our Lord as given by St. Mark, with additions from the Text of the other Evangelists. Edited, with Notes and Vocabulary, by Rev. A. CALVERT, M.A. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Gospel of St. Luke—

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO ST. LUKE. The Greek Text as Revised by Bishop WESTCOTT and Dr. HORT. With Introduction and Notes by Rev. J. BOND, M.A. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

GLASGOW HERALD.—"The notes are short and crisp—suggestive rather than exhaustive."

THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN. A Course of Lectures on the Gospel of St. Luke. By F. D. MAURICE. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Gospel of St. John—

THE CENTRAL TEACHING OF CHRIST. Being a Study and Exposition of St. John, Chapters XIII. to XVII. By Rev. CANON BERNARD, M.A. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

EXPOSITORY TIMES.—"Quite recently we have had an exposition by him whom many call the greatest expositor living. But Canon Bernard's work is still the work that will help the preacher most."

THE MODERN CHURCH.—"A thoroughly sound and scholarly work."

METHODIST TIMES.—"It is a magnificent monograph on St. John xiii.—xvii. inclusive. It is a noble book—a book to delight the intellect, to stimulate the soul, and to refresh the heart . . . not for many a day have we had such a surprise and such a delight as we found the first half-hour we stole in to the company of this born expositor."

THE GOSPEL OF ST. JOHN. By F. D. MAURICE. Cr. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES—

ADDRESSES ON THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES. By the late ARCHBISHOP BENSON. 8vo. [In the Press.]

THE OLD SYRIAC ELEMENT IN THE TEXT OF THE CODEX BEZAE. By F. H. CHASE, B.D. 8vo. 7s. 6d. net.

THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES IN GREEK AND ENGLISH. With Notes by Rev. F. RENDALL, M.A. Cr. 8vo. 9s.

SATURDAY REVIEW.—"Mr. Rendall has given us a very useful as well as a very scholarly book."

BRITISH WEEKLY.—"On the whole the book is a valuable addition to New Testament literature, being thoroughly up-to-date both in its scholarship and in its general information and critical judgment."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"Mr. Rendall is a careful scholar and a thoughtful writer, and the student may learn a good deal from his commentary."

THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES. By F. D. MAURICE. Cr. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES. Being the Greek Text as Revised by Bishop WESTCOTT and Dr. HORT. With Explanatory Notes by T. E. PAGE, M.A. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

ACTS OF THE APOSTLES. The Authorised Version, with Introduction and Notes, by T. E. PAGE, M.A., and Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

BRITISH WEEKLY.—"Mr. Page's Notes on the Greek Text of the Acts are very well known, and are decidedly scholarly and individual. . . . Mr. Page has written an introduction which is brief, scholarly, and suggestive."

SCOTSMAN.—"It is a much more scholarly edition than is usually found, prepared for use in schools, and yet keeps its learning well within the limits of the needs and the capacities of young students of the Bible."

THE CHURCH OF THE FIRST DAYS. THE CHURCH OF JERUSALEM. THE CHURCH OF THE GENTILES. THE CHURCH OF THE WORLD. Lectures on the Acts of the Apostles. By Very Rev. C. J. VAUGHAN. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

THE EPISTLES of St. Paul—

ST. PAUL'S EPISTLE TO THE ROMANS. The Greek Text, with English Notes. By Very Rev. C. J. VAUGHAN. 7th Edition. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

PROLEGOMENA TO ST. PAUL'S EPISTLES TO THE ROMANS AND THE EPHESIANS. By Rev. F. J. A. HORT. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Dr. MARCUS DODS in the Bookman.—"Anything from the pen of Dr. Hort is sure to be informative and suggestive, and the present publication bears his mark. . . . There is an air of originality about the whole discussion; the difficulties are candidly faced, and the explanations offered appeal to our sense of what is reasonable."

TIMES.—"Will be welcomed by all theologians as 'an invaluable contribution to the study of those Epistles' as the editor of the volume justly calls it."

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"The lectures are an important contribution to the study of the famous Epistles of which they treat."

ST. PAUL'S EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS. A Revised Text, with Introduction, Notes, and Dissertations. By Bishop LIGHTFOOT. 10th Edition. 8vo. 12s.

THE EPISTLES of St. Paul—continued.

ST. PAUL'S EPISTLE TO THE PHILIPPIANS. A Revised Text, with Introduction, Notes, and Dissertations. By the same. 9th Edition. 8vo. 12s.

ST. PAUL'S EPISTLE TO THE PHILIPPIANS. With translation, Paraphrase, and Notes for English Readers. By Very Rev. C. J. VAUGHAN. Crown 8vo. 5s.

ST. PAUL'S EPISTLES TO THE COLOSSIANS AND TO PHILEMON. A Revised Text, with Introductions, etc. By Bishop LIGHTFOOT. 9th Edition. 8vo. 12s.

THE EPISTLES OF ST. PAUL TO THE EPHESIANS, THE COLOSSIANS, AND PHILEMON. With Introductions and Notes. By Rev. J. LL. DAVIES. 2nd Edition. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

THE EPISTLES OF ST. PAUL. For English Readers. Part I. containing the First Epistle to the Thessalonians. By Very Rev. C. J. VAUGHAN. 2nd Edition. 8vo. Sewed. 1s. 6d.

NOTES ON EPISTLES OF ST. PAUL FROM UNPUBLISHED COMMENTARIES. By the late J. B. LIGHTFOOT, D.D., D.C.L., LL.D., Lord Bishop of Durham. 8vo. 12s.

GUARDIAN.—"It scarcely needs to be said, after the experience of former volumes, that the editor has done his part of the work excellently. . . . It also certainly needs not to be said that we have in the commentary much valuable contribution to the study of St. Paul, and that the whole is marked by the Bishop's well-known characteristics of sound scholarship, width of learning, and clear sobriety of judgment."

SCOTSMAN.—"The editing seems to have been carried through in the most unexceptional manner, and fragmentary as the work unfortunately is, it will be received as a valuable contribution to the understanding of those parts of Scripture with which it deals."

The Epistle of St. James—

THE EPISTLE OF ST. JAMES. The Greek Text, with Introduction and Notes. By Rev. JOSEPH B. MAYOR, M.A. 2nd Edition. 8vo. 14s. net.

EXPOSITORY TIMES.—"The most complete edition of St. James in the English language, and the most serviceable for the student of Greek."

BOOKMAN.—"Professor Mayor's volume in every part of it gives proof that no time or labour has been grudged in mastering this mass of literature, and that in appraising it he has exercised the sound judgment of a thoroughly trained scholar and critic. . . . The notes are uniformly characterised by thorough scholarship and unflinching sense. The notes resemble rather those of Lightfoot than those of Ellicott. . . . It is a pleasure to welcome a book which does credit to English learning, and which will take, and keep, a foremost place in Biblical literature."

SCOTSMAN.—"It is a work which sums up many others, and to any one who wishes to make a thorough study of the Epistle of St. James, it will prove indispensable."

EXPOSITOR (DR. MARCUS DOLS).—"Will long remain the commentary on St. James, a storehouse to which all subsequent students of the epistle must be indebted."

The Epistles of St. John—

THE EPISTLES OF ST. JOHN. By F. D. MAURICE. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

THE EPISTLES OF ST. JOHN. The Greek Text, with Notes. By Right Rev. Bishop WESTCOTT. 3rd Edition. 8vo. 12s. 6d.

GUARDIAN.—"It contains a new or rather revised text, with careful critical remarks and helps; very copious footnotes on the text; and after each of the chapters, longer and more elaborate notes in treatment of leading or difficult questions, whether in respect of reading or theology. . . . Dr. Westcott has accumulated round them so much matter that, if not new, was forgotten, or generally unobserved, and has thrown so much light upon their language, theology, and characteristics. . . . The notes, critical, illustrative, and exegetical, which are given beneath the text, are extraordinarily full and careful. . . . They exhibit the same minute analysis of every phrase and word, the same scrupulous weighing of every inflection and variation that characterised Dr. Westcott's commentary on the Gospel. . . . There is scarcely a syllable throughout the Epistles which is dismissed without having undergone the most anxious interrogation."

SATURDAY REVIEW.—"The more we examine this precious volume the more its exceeding richness in spiritual as well as in literary material grows upon the mind."

The Epistle to the Hebrews—

THE EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS IN GREEK AND ENGLISH. With Notes. By Rev. F. RENDALL. Cr. 8vo. 6s.

THE EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS. English Text, with Commentary. By the same. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

THE EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS. With Notes. By Very Rev. C. J. VAUGHAN. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

TIMES.—"The name and reputation of the Dean of Llandaff are a better recommendation than we can give of the Epistle to the Hebrews, the Greek text, with notes; an edition which represents the results of more than thirty years' experience in the training of students for ordination."

THE EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS. The Greek Text, with Notes and Essays. By Right Rev. Bishop WESTCOTT. 8vo. 14s.

GUARDIAN.—"In form this is a companion volume to that upon the Epistles of St. John. The type is excellent, the printing careful, the index thorough; and the volume contains a full introduction, followed by the Greek text, with a running commentary, and a number of additional notes on verbal and doctrinal points which needed fuller discussion. . . . His conception of inspiration is further illustrated by the treatment of the Old Testament in the Epistle, and the additional notes that bear on this point deserve very careful study. The spirit in which the student should approach the perplexing questions of Old Testament criticism could not be better described than it is in the last essay."

REVELATION—

THE BOOK OF REVELATIONS. Arranged and Expounded by the late ARCHBISHOP BENSON. 8vo. [In the Press.]

LECTURES ON THE APOCALYPSE. By F. D. MAURICE. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

LECTURES ON THE APOCALYPSE. By Rev. Prof. W. MILLIGAN. Crown 8vo. 5s.

DISCUSSIONS ON THE APOCALYPSE. By the same. Cr. 8vo. 5s.

SCOTSMAN.—"These discussions give an interesting and valuable account and criticism of the present state of theological opinion and research in connection with their subject."

SCOTTISH GUARDIAN.—"The great merit of the book is the patient and skilful way in which it has brought the whole discussion down to the present day. . . . The result is a volume which many will value highly, and which will not, we think, soon be superseded."

LECTURES ON THE REVELATION OF ST. JOHN. By Very Rev. C. J. VAUGHAN. 5th Edition. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

THE BIBLE WORD-BOOK. By W. ALDIS WRIGHT, Litt.D., LL.D. 2nd Edition. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Christian Church, History of the Cheetham (Archdeacon).—A HISTORY OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH DURING THE FIRST SIX CENTURIES. Cr. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

TIMES.—"A brief but authoritative summary of early ecclesiastical history."

GLASGOW HERALD.—"Particularly clear in its exposition, systematic in its disposition and development, and as light and attractive in style as could reasonably be expected from the nature of the subject."

Gwatkin (H. M.).—SELECTIONS FROM EARLY WRITERS Illustrative of Church History to the Time of Constantine. 2nd Edition. Revised and Enlarged. Cr. 8vo. 4s. 6d. net.

To this edition have been prefixed short accounts of the writers from whom the passages are selected.

Hardwick (Archdeacon).—A HISTORY OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH. Middle Age. Ed. by Bishop STUBBS. Cr. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

A HISTORY OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH DURING THE REFORMATION. Revised by Bishop STUBBS. Cr. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

Hort (Dr. F. J. A.).—TWO DISSERTATIONS. I. On ΜΟΝΟΦΗΣ ΘΕΟΣ in Scripture and Tradition. II. On the "Constantinopolitan" Creed and other Eastern Creeds of the Fourth Century. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

JUDAISTIC CHRISTIANITY. Crown 8vo. 6s.

THE CHRISTIAN ECCLESIA. A Course of Lectures on the Early History and Early Conceptions of the Ecclesia, and Four Sermons. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Krüger (Dr. G.).—HISTORY OF EARLY CHRISTIAN LITERATURE IN THE FIRST THREE CENTURIES. Cr. 8vo. 8s. 6d. net.

Simpson (W.).—AN EPITOME OF THE HISTORY OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Sohm (Prof.).—OUTLINES OF CHURCH HISTORY. Translated by Miss MAY SINCLAIR. With a Preface by Prof. H. M. GWATKIN, M.A. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"It fully deserves the praise given to it by Professor Gwatkin (who contributes a preface to this translation) of being 'neither a meagre sketch nor a confused mass of facts, but a masterly outline,' and it really 'supplies a want,' as affording to the intelligent reader who has no time or interest in details, a connected general view of the whole vast field of ecclesiastical history."

Vaughan (Very Rev. C. J., Dean of Llandaff).—THE CHURCH OF THE FIRST DAYS. THE CHURCH OF JERUSALEM. THE CHURCH OF THE GENTILES. THE CHURCH OF THE WORLD. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

The Church of England

Catechism of—

CATECHISM AND CONFIRMATION. By Rev. J. C. P. ALDOUS. Pott 8vo. 1s. net.

THOSE HOLY MYSTERIES. By Rev. J. C. P. ALDOUS. Pott 8vo. 1s. net.

A CLASS-BOOK OF THE CATECHISM OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND. By Rev. Canon MACLEAR. Pott 8vo. 1s. 6d.

A FIRST CLASS-BOOK OF THE CATECHISM OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND, with Scripture Proofs for Junior Classes and Schools. By the same. Pott 8vo. 6d.

THE ORDER OF CONFIRMATION, with Prayers and Devotions. By the Rev. Canon MACLEAR. 32mo. 6d.

NOTES FOR LECTURES ON CONFIRMATION. By the Rev. C. J. VAUGHAN, D.D. Pott 8vo. 1s. 6d.

Collects—

COLLECTS OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND. With a Coloured Floral Design to each Collect. Crown 8vo. 12s.

Disestablishment—

DISESTABLISHMENT AND DISENDOWMENT. What are they? By Prof. E. A. FREEMAN. 4th Edition. Crown 8vo. 1s.

A DEFENCE OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND AGAINST DISESTABLISHMENT. By ROUNDELL, EARL OF SELBORNE. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.

ANCIENT FACTS & FICTIONS CONCERNING CHURCHES AND TITHES. By the same. 2nd Edition. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

A HANDBOOK ON WELSH CHURCH DEFENCE. By the Bishop of St. ASAPH. 3rd Edition. Fcap. 8vo. Sewed, 6d.

CHURCH TIMES.—"It should be in the hands of all who are actively engaged in defence of the Church in Wales."

CHURCH BELLS.—"We are heartily glad to see this new and handy edition of this valuable little work. Its contents cannot be too generally known."

Dissent in its Relation to—

DISSENT IN ITS RELATION TO THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND. By Rev. G. H. CURTEIS. Bampton Lectures for 1871. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

History of—

DOCUMENTS ILLUSTRATIVE OF ENGLISH CHURCH HISTORY. Compiled from Original Sources by HENRY GEE, B.D., F.S.A., and W. J. HARDY, F.S.A. Cr. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

ENGLISH HISTORICAL REVIEW.—"Will be welcomed alike by students and by a much wider circle of readers interested in the history of the Church of England."

History of—continued.

For the benefit of the latter all the Latin pieces have been translated into English. . . . It fully deserves the hearty imprimatur of the Bishop of Oxford prefixed to it."

ACADEMY.—"The assurance of the Bishop of Oxford, that 'this is a book which will, and indeed must, be received as a great boon by English Churchmen,' is scarcely needed. A glance at the list of the documents printed and a little testing of the accuracy of their editing will convince us that the volume will be found indispensable by students. The book opens with the British Signatories at the Council at Arles, 314 A.D., and finishes with the Act of Settlement, 1700. Between these dates 124 documents are given, carefully dated, with a running analysis of their contents in the margin, and a short historical note prefixed to each. Latin and French documents are translated, and the spelling of the English ones is modernised. The translation is executed with admirable scholarship, and the editing is in every way satisfactory."

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"Students of the English Constitution as well as students of Church History will find this volume a valuable aid to their researches."

SCOTTISH GUARDIAN.—"There is no book in existence that contains so much original material likely to prove valuable to those who wish to investigate ritual or historical questions affecting the English Church."

Holy Communion—

THE COMMUNION SERVICE FROM THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER, with Select Readings from the Writings of the Rev. F. D. MAURICE. Edited by Bishop COLENSO. 6th Edition. 16mo. 2s. 6d.

FIRST COMMUNION, with Prayers and Devotions for the newly Confirmed. By Rev. Canon MACLEAR. 32mo. 6d.

A MANUAL OF INSTRUCTION FOR CONFIRMATION AND FIRST COMMUNION, with Prayers and Devotions. By the same. 32mo. 2s.

Liturgy—

A COMPANION TO THE LECTIONARY. By Rev. W. BENHAM, B.D. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE CREEDS. By Rev. Canon MACLEAR. Pott 8vo. 3s. 6d.

CHURCH QUARTERLY REVIEW.—"Mr. Maclear's text-books of Bible history are so well known that to praise them is unnecessary. He has now added to them An Introduction to the Creeds, which we do not hesitate to call admirable. The book consists, first, of an historical introduction, occupying 53 pages, then an exposition of the twelve articles of the Creed extending to page 299, an appendix containing the texts of a considerable number of Creeds, and lastly, three indices which, as far as we have tested them, we must pronounce very good. . . . We may add that we know already that the book has been used with great advantage in ordinary parochial work."

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE ARTICLES OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND. By Rev. G. F. MACLEAR, D.D., and Rev. W. W. WILLIAMS. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

The BISHOP OF SALISBURY at the Church Congress, spoke of this as "a book which will doubtless have, as it deserves, large circulation."

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"Theological students and others will find this comprehensive yet concise volume most valuable."

GLASGOW HERALD.—"A valuable addition to the well-known series of Theological Manuals published by Messrs. Macmillan."

CHURCH TIMES.—"Those who are in any way responsible for the training of candidates for Holy Orders must often have felt the want of such a book as Dr. Maclear, with the assistance of his colleague, Mr. Williams, has just published."

Liturgy—continued.

A HISTORY OF THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER. By Rev. F. PROCTER. 18th Edition. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

CHURCH QUARTERLY REVIEW.—"We are glad to see that Mr. Procter's History of the Book of Common Prayer still retains its hold on public favour, and more especially we may presume on that of candidates for theological examinations. That it too has been carefully revised and added to by its venerable and highly respected author, may be inferred from the fact that the present edition numbers 483 pages (exclusive of the Appendix), as against the 453 pages of the 13th edition (1876)."

AN ELEMENTARY INTRODUCTION TO THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER. By Rev. F. PROCTER and Rev. Canon
MACLEAR. Pott 8vo. 2s. 6d.

TWELVE DISCOURSES ON SUBJECTS CONNECTED WITH THE LITURGY AND WORSHIP OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND. By Very Rev. C. J. VAUGHAN. 4th Edition.
Fcap. 8vo. 6s.

Historical and Biographical—

THE ECCLESIASTICAL EXPANSION OF ENGLAND IN THE GROWTH OF THE ANGLICAN COMMUNION.
Hulsean Lectures, 1894-95. By ALFRED BARRY, D.D., D.C.L., formerly Bishop of Sydney and Primate of Australia and Tasmania.
Crown 8vo. 6s.

The author's preface says: "The one object of these lectures—delivered on the Hulsean Foundation in 1894-95—is to make some slight contribution to that awakening of interest in the extraordinary religious mission of England which seems happily characteristic of the present time."

DAILY NEWS.—"These lectures are particularly interesting as containing the case for the Christian missions at a time when there is a disposition to attack them in some quarters."

GLASGOW HERALD.—"Those interested in the subject will find in these lectures a highly useful account in a short space of what the Church of England has actually accomplished abroad."

THE OXFORD MOVEMENT. Twelve Years, 1833-45. By DEAN CHURCH. Globe 8vo. 5s.

THE LIFE AND LETTERS OF R. W. CHURCH, late Dean of St. Paul's. Globe 8vo. 5s.

JAMES FRASER, SECOND BISHOP OF MANCHESTER. A Memoir.
1818-1885. By THOMAS HUGHES, Q.C. 2nd Edition. Crown
8vo. 6s.

LIFE AND LETTERS OF FENTON JOHN ANTHONY
HORT, D.D., D.C.L., LL.D., sometime Hulsean Professor and Lady Margaret's Reader in Divinity in the University of Cambridge.
By his Son, ARTHUR FENTON HORT, late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. In two Vols. With Portrait. Ex. Cr. 8vo. 17s. net.

EXPOSITOR.—"It is only just to publish the life of a scholar at once so well known and so little known as Dr. Hort. . . . But all who appreciate his work wish to know more, and the two fascinating volumes edited by his son give us the information we seek. They reveal to us a man the very antipodes of a dry-as-dust pedant, a man with many interests and enthusiasms, a lover of the arts and of nature, an athlete and one of the founders of the Historical and Biographical—continued.

Alpine Club, a man of restless mind but always at leisure for the demands of friendship, and finding his truest joy in his own home and family. Indeed, one sees that Dr. Hort would have accomplished more, although he would not have been so attractive a man, had he been more limited in his interests. The volumes are also valuable as giving us the inner history of his great work in connection with the text of the New Testament."

THE LIFE OF FREDERICK DENISON MAURICE. Chiefly told in his own letters. Edited by his Son, FREDERICK MAURICE. With Portraits. Two Vols. Crown 8vo. 16s.

MEMORIALS (PART I.) FAMILY AND PERSONAL, 1766-1865. By ROUNDELL, EARL OF SELBORNE. With Portraits and Illustrations. Two Vols. 8vo. 25s. net.

LIFE OF ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL TAIT, ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY. By RANDALL THOMAS, Bishop of Rochester, and WILLIAM BENHAM, B.D., Hon. Canon of Canterbury. With Portraits. 3rd Edition. Two Vols. Crown 8vo. 10s. net.

WILLIAM GEORGE WARD AND THE OXFORD MOVEMENT. By W. WARD. Portrait. 8vo. 14s.

WILLIAM GEORGE WARD AND THE CATHOLIC REVIVAL. By the Same. 8vo. 14s.

LIFE AND LETTERS OF WILLIAM JOHN BUTLER, late Dean of Lincoln, sometime Vicar of Wantage. 8vo. 12s. 6d. net.

TIMES.—"We have a graphic picture of a strong personality, and the example of a useful and laborious life. . . . Well put together and exceedingly interesting to Churchmen."

IN THE COURT OF THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY. Read and others v. The Lord Bishop of Lincoln. Judgment, Nov. 21, 1890. 2nd Edition. 8vo. 2s. net.

CANTERBURY DIOCESAN GAZETTE. Monthly. 8vo. 2d.

JEWISH QUARTERLY REVIEW. Edited by I. ABRAHAMS and C. G. MONTEFIORE. Demy 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Devotional Books

Cornish (J. F.)—WEEK BY WEEK. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

The author's intention in this volume is to provide a few simple verses for each Sunday in the year, connecting them in every case with the Collect, Epistle, or Gospel for the day. He explains in the Preface that the nature of his week-day work, and the conditions under which his rhymes were written, have led him perhaps to think especially of the young, and of "those who are any ways afflicted or distressed."

SPECTATOR.—"They are very terse and excellent verses, generally on the subject of either the Epistle or Gospel for the day, and are put with the kind of practical vigour which arrests attention and compels the conscience to face boldly some leading thought in the passage selected."

SATURDAY REVIEW.—"The studied simplicity of Mr. Cornish's verse is altogether opposed to what most hymn-writers consider to be poetry. Nor is this the only merit of his unpretentious volume. There is a tonic character in the exhortation and admonition that characterise the hymns, and the prevailing sentiment is thoroughly manly and rousing."

Eastlake (Lady).—FELLOWSHIP: LETTERS ADDRESSED TO MY SISTER-MOURNERS. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.

ATHENÆUM.—"Tender and unobtrusive, and the author thoroughly realises the sorrow of those she addresses; it may soothe mourning readers, and can by no means aggravate or jar upon their feelings."

CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.—"A very touching and at the same time a very sensible book. It breathes throughout the truest Christian spirit."

NONCONFORMIST.—"A beautiful little volume, written with genuine feeling, good taste, and a right appreciation of the teaching of Scripture relative to sorrow and suffering."

IMITATIO CHRISTI, LIBRI IV. Printed in Borders after Holbein, Dürer, and other old Masters, containing Dances of Death, Acts of Mercy, Emblems, etc. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Keble (J.)—THE CHRISTIAN YEAR. Edited by C. M. YONGE. Pott 8vo. 2s. 6d. net.

Kingsley (Charles).—OUT OF THE DEEP: WORDS FOR THE SORROWFUL. From the writings of CHARLES KINGSLEY. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

DAILY THOUGHTS. Selected from the Writings of CHARLES KINGSLEY. By his Wife. Crown 8vo. 6s.

FROM DEATH TO LIFE. Fragments of Teaching to a Village Congregation. With Letters on the "Life after Death." Edited by his Wife. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Maclear (Rev. Canon).—A MANUAL OF INSTRUCTION FOR CONFIRMATION AND FIRST COMMUNION, WITH PRAYERS AND DEVOTIONS. 32mo. 2s.

THE HOUR OF SORROW; OR, THE OFFICE FOR THE BURIAL OF THE DEAD. 32mo. 2s.

Maurice (Frederick Denison).—LESSONS OF HOPE. Readings from the Works of F. D. MAURICE. Selected by Rev. J. LL. DAVIES, M.A. Crown 8vo. 5s.

RAYS OF SUNLIGHT FOR DARK DAYS. With a Preface by Very Rev. C. J. VAUGHAN, D.D. New Edition. Pott 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Service (Rev. John).—PRAYERS FOR PUBLIC WORSHIP. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

THE WORSHIP OF GOD, AND FELLOWSHIP AMONG MEN. By FREDERICK DENISON MAURICE and others. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Welby-Gregory (The Hon. Lady).—LINKS AND CLUES. 2nd Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Westcott (Rt. Rev. B. F., Bishop of Durham).—THOUGHTS ON REVELATION AND LIFE. Selections from the Writings of Bishop WESTCOTT. Edited by Rev. S. PHILLIPS. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Wilbraham (Frances M.).—IN THE SERE AND YELLOW LEAF: THOUGHTS AND RECOLLECTIONS FOR OLD AND YOUNG. Globe 8vo. 3s. 6d.

The Fathers

INDEX OF NOTEWORTHY WORDS AND PHRASES FOUND IN THE CLEMENTINE WRITINGS, COMMONLY CALLED THE HOMILIES OF CLEMENT. 8vo. 5s.

Benson (Archbishop).—CYPRIAN: HIS LIFE, HIS TIMES, HIS WORK. By the late EDWARD WHITE BENSON, Archbishop of Canterbury. 8vo. 21s. net.

TIMES.—"In all essential respects, in sobriety of judgment and temper, in sympathetic insight into character, in firm grasp of historical and ecclesiastical issues, in scholarship and erudition, the finished work is worthy of its subject and worthy of its author. . . . In its main outlines full of dramatic insight and force, and in its details full of the fruits of ripe learning, sound judgment, a lofty Christian temper, and a mature ecclesiastical wisdom."

SATURDAY REVIEW.—"On the whole, and with all reservations which can possibly be made, this weighty volume is a contribution to criticism and learning on which we can but congratulate the Anglican Church. We wish more of her bishops were capable or desirous of descending into that arena of pure intellect from which Dr. Benson returns with these posthumous laurels."

Gwatkin (H. M.) SELECTIONS FROM EARLY WRITERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF CHURCH HISTORY TO THE TIME OF CONSTANTINE. 2nd Edition. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d. net.

Hort (F. J. A.) SIX LECTURES ON THE ANTE-NICENE FATHERS. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

TIMES.—"Though certainly popular in form and treatment they are so in the best sense of the words, and they bear throughout the impress of the ripe scholarship, the rare critical acumen, and the lofty ethical temper which marked all Dr. Hort's work."

Lightfoot (Bishop).—THE APOSTOLIC FATHERS. Part I. ST. CLEMENT OF ROME. Revised Texts, with Introductions, Notes, Dissertations, and Translations. 2 vols. 8vo. 32s.

THE APOSTOLIC FATHERS. Part II. ST. IGNATIUS to ST. POLYCARP. Revised Texts, with Introductions, Notes, Dissertations, and Translations. 3 vols. 2nd Edition. Demy 8vo. 48s.

THE APOSTOLIC FATHERS. Abridged Edition. With Short Introductions, Greek Text, and English Translation. 8vo. 16s.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"A conspectus of these early and intensely interesting Christian 'Documents' such as had not hitherto been attainable, and thereby renders a priceless service to all serious students of Christian theology, and even of Roman history."

NATIONAL OBSERVER.—"From the account of its contents, the student may appreciate the value of this last work of a great scholar, and its helpfulness as an aid to an intelligent examination of the earliest post-Apostolic writers. The texts are constructed on the most careful collation of all the existing sources. The introductions are brief, lucid, and thoroughly explanatory of the historical and critical questions related to the texts. The introduction to the Didache, and the translation of the 'Church Manual of Early Christianity,' are peculiarly interesting, as giving at once an admirable version of it, and the opinion of the first of English biblical critics on the latest discovery in patristic literature."

Hymnology

Bernard (T. D.).—THE SONGS OF THE HOLY NATIVITY. Being Studies of the Benedictus, Magnificat, Gloria in Excelsis, and Nunc Dimittis. Crown 8vo. 5s.

Brooke (S. A.).—CHRISTIAN HYMNS. Edited and arranged. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d. net.

Selborne (Roundell, Earl of).—

THE BOOK OF PRAISE. From the best English Hymn Writers. Pott 8vo. 2s. 6d. net.

- A HYMNAL. Chiefly from The Book of Praise. In various sizes.
 —A. Royal 32mo. 6d.—B. Pott 8vo, larger type. 1s.—C. Same Edition, fine paper. 1s. 6d.—An Edition with Music, Selected, Harmonised, and Composed by JOHN HULLAH. Pott 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Woods (M. A.)—HYMNS FOR SCHOOL WORSHIP.
 Compiled by M. A. Woods. Pott 8vo. 1s. 6d.

Religious Teaching

- Bell (Rev. G. C.)—RELIGIOUS TEACHING IN SECONDARY SCHOOLS. For Teachers and Parents. Suggestions as to Lessons on the Bible, Early Church History, Christian Evidences, etc. By the Rev. G. C. BELL, M.A., Master of Marlborough College. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

A plea by the Master of Marlborough College for such selection of material for teaching as shall bring into the foreground those essential and vital elements of the Bible which are of main importance; and for widening the range of higher religious teaching by the inclusion of subjects commonly neglected. The argument is illustrated by suggestions for lessons on the Old Testament, "inter-testamental" history, the New Testament, Early Church history, and Christian evidences; also by a short summary of some results of higher criticism.

GUARDIAN.—"The hints and suggestions given are admirable, and, as far as Bible teaching or instruction in 'Christian Evidences' is concerned, leave nothing to be desired. Much time and thought has evidently been devoted by the writer to the difficulties which confront the teacher of the Old Testament, and a large portion of the volume is taken up with the consideration of this branch of his subject."

TIMES.—"Mr. Bell makes many highly valuable suggestions. . . . As a protest against the meaningless and formal treatment of religion by both teachers and examiners at so many public schools, and a practical handbook to guide those who would aim at something better, this little volume is invaluable."

EDUCATIONAL REVIEW.—"For those teachers who are dissatisfied with the existing state of things, and who are striving after something better, this little handbook is invaluable. Its aim is 'to map out a course of instruction on practical lines, and to suggest methods and books which may point the way to a higher standpoint and a wider horizon.' For the carrying out of this, and also for his criticism of prevailing methods, all teachers owe Mr. Bell a debt of gratitude; and if any are roused to a due sense of their responsibility in this matter, he will feel that his book has not been written in vain."

Sermons, Lectures, Addresses, and Theological Essays

(See also 'Bible,' 'Church of England,' 'Fathers')

Abbot (Francis)—

THE WAY OUT OF AGNOSTICISM: or, The Philosophy of Free Religion. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

Abbott (Rev. E. A.)—

CAMBRIDGE SERMONS. 8vo. 6s.

OXFORD SERMONS. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

PHILOMYTHUS. An Antidote against Credulity. A discussion of Cardinal Newman's Essay on Ecclesiastical Miracles. 2nd Edition. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

THE SPIRIT ON THE WATERS, OR DIVINE EVOLUTION AS THE BASIS OF CHRISTIAN BELIEF. 8vo. 12s. 6d. net.

Abrahams (I.)—Montefiore (C. G.)—ASPECTS OF JUDAISM. Being Sixteen Sermons. 2nd Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d. net.

TIMES.—"There is a great deal in them that does not appeal to Jews alone, for, especially in Mr. Montefiore's addresses, the doctrines advocated, with much charm of style, are often not by any means exclusively Jewish, but such as are shared and honoured by all who care for religion and morality as those terms are commonly understood in the western world."

GLASGOW HERALD.—"Both from the homiletic and what may be called the big-world point of view, this little volume is one of considerable interest."

Ainger (Rev. Alfred, Master of the Temple).—SERMONS PREACHED IN THE TEMPLE CHURCH. Extra fcap. 8vo. 6s.

Baines (Rev. Edward).—SERMONS. With a Preface and Memoir, by A. BARRY, D.D., late Bishop of Sydney. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Bather (Archdeacon).—ON SOME MINISTERIAL DUTIES, CATECHISING, PREACHING, ETC. Edited, with a Preface, by Very Rev. C. J. VAUGHAN, D.D. Fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

Benson (Archbishop).—

BOY-LIFE: its Trial, its Strength, its Fulness. Sundays in Wellington College, 1859-73. 4th Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.

CHRIST AND HIS TIMES. Addressed to the Diocese of Canterbury in his Second Visitation. Crown 8vo. 6s.

FISHERS OF MEN. Addressed to the Diocese of Canterbury in his Third Visitation. Crown 8vo. 6s.

GUARDIAN.—"There is plenty of plain speaking in the addresses before us, and they contain many wise and thoughtful counsels on subjects of the day."

TIMES.—"With keen insight and sagacious counsel, the Archbishop surveys the condition and prospects of the church."

ARCHBISHOP BENSON IN IRELAND. A record of his Irish Sermons and Addresses. Edited by J. H. BERNARD. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"No words of mine could appreciate, or do justice to, the stately language and lofty thoughts of the late Primate; they will appeal to every Churchman."

ADDRESSES ON THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES. 8vo.

[In the Press.]

Bernard (Canon).—THE SONGS OF THE HOLY NATIVITY CONSIDERED (1) AS RECORDED IN SCRIPTURE, (2) AS IN USE IN THE CHURCH. Crown 8vo. 5s.

To use the words of its author, this book is offered "to readers of Scripture as expository of a distinct portion of the Holy Word; to worshippers in the congregation as a devotional commentary on the hymns which they use ; to those keeping Christmas, as a contribution to the ever-welcome thoughts of that blessed season ; to all Christian people who, in the midst of the historical elaboration of Christianity, find it good to re-enter from time to time the clear atmosphere of its origin, and are fain in the heat of the day to recover some feeling of the freshness of dawn."

GLASGOW HERALD.—"He conveys much useful information in a scholarly way."

SCOTSMAN.—"Their meaning and their relationships, the reasons why the Church has adopted them, and many other kindred points, are touched upon in the book with so well-explained a learning and with so much insight that the book will be highly valued by those interested in its subject."

Brooke (Rev. Stopford A.)—SHORT SERMONS. Cr. 8vo. 6s.

Brooks (Phillips, late Bishop of Massachusetts)—

THE CANDLE OF THE LORD, and other Sermons. Crown 8vo. 6s.

SERMONS PREACHED IN ENGLISH CHURCHES. Crown 8vo. 6s.

TWENTY SERMONS. Crown 8vo. 6s.

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

THE MYSTERY OF INIQUITY. Crown 8vo. 6s.

ESSAYS AND ADDRESSES, RELIGIOUS, LITERARY, AND SOCIAL. Edited by the Rev. JOHN COTTON BROOKS. Crown 8vo. 8s. 6d. net.

TIMES.—"Well calculated to display the wide culture, high spiritual fervour, and broad human sympathies of this lamented divine."

SCOTSMAN.—"A worthy memento of a good man, and a valuable accession to the world's stock of book wisdom, which needs no name to recommend it."

NEW YORK INDEPENDENT.—"It is full of good things, and richer in nothing than the noble inspiration which formed a part of everything that came from Phillips Brooks."

NEW STARTS IN LIFE, AND OTHER SERMONS. Crown 8vo. 6s.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"All characterised by that fervent piety, catholicity of spirit, and fine command of language for which the Bishop was famous."

THE MORE ABUNDANT LIFE. Lenten Readings. Crown 8vo. 5s.

Brunton (T. Lauder).—THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE.
With Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

Campbell (Dr. John M'Leod)—

THE NATURE OF THE ATONEMENT. 6th Ed. Cr. 8vo. 6s.

REMINISCENCES AND REFLECTIONS. Edited with an Introductory Narrative, by his Son, DONALD CAMPBELL, M.A.
Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

THOUGHTS ON REVELATION. 2nd Edition. Crown 8vo. 5s.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR THE GIFT OF ETERNAL LIFE.
Compiled from Sermons preached at Row, in the years 1829-31.
Crown 8vo. 5s.

Canterbury (Frederick, Archbishop of)—

SERMONS PREACHED IN THE CHAPEL OF RUGBY
SCHOOL. Extra Fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

SECOND SERIES. 3rd Ed. 6s.

THIRD SERIES. 4th Edition. 6s.

THE RELATIONS BETWEEN RELIGION AND SCIENCE.
Bampton Lectures, 1884. 7th and Cheaper Ed. Cr. 8vo. 6s.

Carpenter (W. Boyd, Bishop of Ripon)—

TRUTH IN TALE. Addresses, chiefly to Children. Crown 8vo.
4s. 6d.

THE PERMANENT ELEMENTS OF RELIGION: Bampton
Lectures, 1887. 2nd Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.

TWILIGHT DREAMS. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

LECTURES ON PREACHING. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. net.

TIMES.—"These Lectures on Preaching, delivered a year ago in the Divinity School at Cambridge, are an admirable analysis of the intellectual, ethical, spiritual, and rhetorical characteristics of the art of preaching. In six lectures the Bishop deals successfully with the preacher and his training, with the sermon and its structure, with the preacher and his age, and with the aim of the preacher. In each case he is practical, suggestive, eminently stimulating, and often eloquent, not with the mere splendour of rhetoric, but with the happy faculty of saying the right thing in well-chosen words."

SOME THOUGHTS ON CHRISTIAN REUNION. Being a Charge to the Clergy. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. net.

TIMES.—"Dr. Boyd Carpenter treats this very difficult subject with moderation and good sense, and with a clear-headed perception of the limits which inexorably circumscribe the natural aspirations of Christians of different churches and nationalities for a more intimate communion and fellowship."

LEEDS MERCURY.—"He discusses with characteristic vigour and felicity the claims which hinder reunion, and the true idea and scope of catholicity."

Cheetham (Archdeacon).—MYSTERIES, PAGAN AND CHRISTIAN. Being the Hulsean Lectures for 1896. Crown
8vo. 5s.

Church (Dean)—

HUMAN LIFE AND ITS CONDITIONS. Crown 8vo. 6s.

THE GIFTS OF CIVILISATION, and other Sermons and Lectures.
2nd Edition. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

DISCIPLINE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHARACTER, and other
Sermons. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

ADVENT SERMONS. 1885. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

VILLAGE SERMONS. Crown 8vo. 6s.

VILLAGE SERMONS. Second Series. Crown 8vo. 6s.

VILLAGE SERMONS. Third Series. Crown 8vo. 6s.

TIMES.—"In these sermons we see how a singularly gifted and cultivated mind was able to communicate its thoughts on the highest subjects to those with whom it might be supposed to have little in common. . . . His village sermons are not the by-work of one whose interests were elsewhere in higher matters. They are the outcome of his deepest interests and of the life of his choice. . . . These sermons are worth perusal, if only to show what preaching, even to the humble and unlearned hearers, may be made in really competent hands."

CATHEDRAL AND UNIVERSITY SERMONS. Crown 8vo. 6s

PASCAL AND OTHER SERMONS. Crown 8vo. 6s.

TIMES.—"They are all eminently characteristic of one of the most saintly of modern divines, and one of the most scholarly of modern men of letters."

SPECTATOR.—"Dean Church's seem to us the finest sermons published since Newman's, even Dr. Liddon's rich and eloquent discourses not excepted,—and they breathe more of the spirit of perfect peace than even Newman's. They cannot be called High Church or Broad Church, much less Low Church sermons; they are simply the sermons of a good scholar, a great thinker, and a firm and serene Christian."

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"Such sermons as Dean Church's really enrich the national literature. We may well hope they do more. The discourse which concludes this volume, 'Life in the Light of Immortality,' supplies the Christian apologist with an argument the cogency of which it is difficult to imagine impaired, and interprets to the Christian believer a sure and certain hope. Nothing in these days is more needed."

CLERGYMAN'S SELF-EXAMINATION CONCERNING THE APOSTLES' CREED. Extra fcap. 8vo. 1s. 6d.

A CONFESSION OF FAITH. By an UNORTHODOX BELIEVER. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

GRAPHIC.—"The book not only abounds with spiritual charm and metaphysical insight, but it is an excellent specimen of good hard thinking and close reasoning, in which the reader will find plenty of capital exercise for the intellectual muscles."

Congreve (Rev. John).—HIGH HOPES AND PLEADINGS FOR A REASONABLE FAITH, NOBLER THOUGHTS, LARGER CHARITY. Crown 8vo. 5s.

Cooke (Josiah P.)—

THE CREDENTIALS OF SCIENCE, THE WARRANT OF FAITH. 8vo. 8s. 6d. net.

Curteis (Rev. G. H.)—THE SCIENTIFIC OBSTACLES TO CHRISTIAN BELIEF. The Boyle Lectures, 1884. Cr. 8vo. 6s.

Davidson (R. T., Bishop of Winchester)—A CHARGE DELIVERED TO THE CLERGY OF THE DIOCESE OF ROCHESTER, October 29, 30, 31, 1894. 8vo. Sewed. 2s. net.

Davies (Rev. J. Llewelyn)—

THE GOSPEL AND MODERN LIFE. 2nd Edition, to which is added Morality according to the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Extra fcap. 8vo. 6s.

SOCIAL QUESTIONS FROM THE POINT OF VIEW OF CHRISTIAN THEOLOGY. 2nd Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.

WARNINGS AGAINST SUPERSTITION. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

THE CHRISTIAN CALLING. Extra fcap. 8vo. 6s.

BAPTISM, CONFIRMATION, AND THE LORD'S SUPPER, as interpreted by their Outward Signs. Three Addresses. New Edition. Pott 8vo. 1s.

ORDER AND GROWTH AS INVOLVED IN THE SPIRITUAL CONSTITUTION OF HUMAN SOCIETY. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

GLASGOW HERALD.—"This is a wise and suggestive book, touching upon many of the more interesting questions of the present day. . . . A book as full of hope as it is of ability."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"He says what he means, but never more than he means; and hence his words carry weight with many to whom the ordinary sermon would appeal in vain. . . . The whole book is well worth study."

ABERDEEN DAILY FREE PRESS.—"An able discussion of the true basis and aim of social progress."

SCOTSMAN.—"Thoughtful and suggestive."

SCOTTISH LEADER.—"Bearing the impress of an earnest and original mind that frequently shakes itself free from the fetters of conventional thinking . . . able and thoughtful lectures. . . . It is much to be desired that a work written on such broad and honest lines may be widely read and its lessons carefully pondered."

Davies (W.)—THE PILGRIM OF THE INFINITE. A Discourse addressed to Advanced Religious Thinkers on Christian Lines. By WM. DAVIES. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

GLASGOW HERALD.—“Contains much earnest and stimulating thought.”

CHRISTIAN WORLD.—“We hail this work as one which in an age of much mental unrest sounds a note of faith which appeals confidently to the highest intellect, inasmuch as it springs out of the clearest intuitions of the human spirit.”

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—“The little volume contains much that is attractive, much that is wise as well as impressive.”

Diggle (Rev. J. W.)—GODLINESS AND MANLINESS. A Miscellany of Brief Papers touching the Relation of Religion to Life. By JOHN W. DIGGLE, M.A., Archdeacon of Westmoreland. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Ellerton (Rev. John).—THE HOLIEST MANHOOD, AND ITS LESSONS FOR BUSY LIVES. Crown 8vo. 6s.

EVIL AND EVOLUTION. An attempt to turn the Light of Modern Science on to the Ancient Mystery of Evil. By the author of The Social Horizon. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. net.

EXPOSITORY TIMES.—“The book is well worth the interest it is almost certain to excite.”

CHURCH TIMES.—“There can be no question about the courage or the keen logic and the lucid style of this fascinating treatment of a problem which is of pathetic interest to all of us. . . . It deserves to be studied by all, and no one who reads it can fail to be struck by it.”

FAITH AND CONDUCT: An Essay on Verifiable Religion. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Farrar (Very Rev. F. W., Dean of Canterbury)—

THE HISTORY OF INTERPRETATION. Being the Bampton Lectures, 1885. 8vo. 16s.

Collected Edition of the Sermons, etc. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. each.

SEEKERS AFTER GOD.

ETERNAL HOPE. Sermons Preached in Westminster Abbey.

THE FALL OF MAN, and other Sermons.

THE WITNESS OF HISTORY TO CHRIST. Hulsean Lectures.

THE SILENCE AND VOICES OF GOD.

IN THE DAYS OF THY YOUTH. Sermons on Practical Subjects.

SAINTLY WORKERS. Five Lenten Lectures.

EPHAPHATHA: or, The Amelioration of the World.

MERCY AND JUDGMENT. A few words on Christian Eschatology

SERMONS AND ADDRESSES delivered in America.

Fiske (John).—MAN'S DESTINY VIEWED IN THE LIGHT OF HIS ORIGIN. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Foxell (W. J.)—GOD'S GARDEN: Sunday Talks with Boys. With an Introduction by Dean FARRAR. Globe 8vo. 3s. 6d.

SPEAKER.—"Deals with obvious problems of faith and conduct in a strain of vigorous simplicity, and with an evident knowledge of the needs, the moods, the difficulties of boy-life. It is the kind of book which instils lessons of courage, trust, patience, and forbearance; and does so quite as much by example as by precept."

IN A PLAIN PATH. Addresses to Boys. Globe 8vo. 3s. 6d.

SPEAKER.—"He handles with admirable vigour, and real discernment of a boy's difficulties, such high themes as the use of time, noble revenge, the true gentleman, the noblest victory, and progress through failure. There is nothing childish in the method of treatment, and yet we feel sure that a man who spoke to a congregation of lads in this fashion would not talk over the head of the youngest, and yet find his way to the hearts of those who are just passing from the restraints of school to the responsibilities of life."

Fraser (Bishop).—UNIVERSITY SERMONS. Edited by Rev. JOHN W. DIGGLE. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Glover (E.)—MEMORIALS OF EDWARD GLOVER. Comprising Twelve Sermons edited by the Rev. G. GLOVER. Crown 8vo. 3s. net.

Grane (W. L.)—THE WORD AND THE WAY: or, The Light of the Ages on the Path of To-Day. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Hardwick (Archdeacon).—CHRIST AND OTHER MASTERS. 6th Edition. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

Hare (Julius Charles)—

THE MISSION OF THE COMFORTER. New Edition. Edited by Dean PLUMPTRE. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Harris (Rev. G. C.)—SERMONS. With a Memoir by CHARLOTTE M. YONGE, and Portrait. Extra fcap. 8vo. 6s.

Hort (F. J. A.)—THE WAY, THE TRUTH, THE LIFE. Hulsean Lectures, 1871. Crown 8vo. 6s.

CAMBRIDGE REVIEW.—"Only to few is it given to scan the wide fields of truth with clear vision of near and far alike. To what an extraordinary degree the late Dr. Hort possessed this power is shown by the Hulsean Lectures just published. They carry us in the most wonderful way to the very centre of the Christian system; no aspect of truth, no part of the world, seems to be left out of view; while in every page we recognise the gathered fruits of a rare scholarship in the service of an unwearying thought."

JUDAISTIC CHRISTIANITY. Crown 8vo. 6s.

SCOTSMAN.—"The great merit of Dr. Hort's lectures is that succinctly and yet fully, and in a clear and interesting and suggestive manner, they give us not only his own opinions, but whatever of worth has been advanced on the subject."

GLASGOW HERALD.—"Will receive a respectful welcome at the hands of all biblical scholars. . . . A model of exact and patient scholarship, controlled by robust English sagacity, and it is safe to say that it will take a high place in the literature of the subject."

VILLAGE SERMONS. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Selected from the Sermons preached by Professor HORT to his village congregation at St. Ippolyt's, and including a series of Sermons dealing in a broad and suggestive way with the successive books of the Bible, from Genesis to Revelations.

Hughes (T.)—THE MANLINESS OF CHRIST. 2nd Ed. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

GLOBE.—"The Manliness of Christ is a species of lay sermon such as Judge Hughes is well qualified to deliver, seeing that manliness of thought and feeling has been the prevailing characteristic of all his literary products."

BRITISH WEEKLY.—"A new edition of a strong book."

Hutton (R. H.)—

ESSAYS ON SOME OF THE MODERN GUIDES OF ENGLISH THOUGHT IN MATTERS OF FAITH. Globe 8vo. 5s.
THEOLOGICAL ESSAYS. Globe 8vo. 5s.

Hyde (W. DE W.)—OUTLINES OF SOCIAL THEOLOGY.
Crown 8vo. 6s.

Dr. Hyde thus describes the object of his book: "This little book aims to point out the logical relations in which the doctrines of theology will stand to each other when the time shall come again for seeing Christian truth in the light of reason and Christian life as the embodiment of love."

PRACTICAL IDEALISM. Globe 8vo. 5s. net.

Illingworth (Rev. J. R.)—SERMONS PREACHED IN A COLLEGE CHAPEL. Crown 8vo. 5s.

UNIVERSITY AND CATHEDRAL SERMONS. Crown 8vo. 5s.
PERSONALITY, DIVINE AND HUMAN. Bampton Lectures, 1894. Crown 8vo. 6s.

TIMES.—"Will take high rank among the rare theological masterpieces produced by that celebrated foundation."

SCOTSMAN.—"Mr. Illingworth has evidently thought out the difficult subject with which he deals for himself, and has given utterance to his views in a style at once scholarly and popularly intelligible."

GLASGOW HERALD.—"The entire absence of philosophical and theological technicalities and the perfect lucidity of the style should commend them to many outside of the circle of professional theologians."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"One of the most attractive theological works of the season."

EXPOSITOR.—"It is difficult to convey an adequate impression of the freshness and strength of the whole argument. . . . It is a book which no one can be satisfied with reading once; it is to be studied. And if frequent study of it should result in the modification of some of its statements, there will inevitably grow in the mind a sense of indebtedness for many valuable thoughts, and a deepening admiration of the rare philosophical training, the full theological equipment, and the singular grace and strength of treatment recognisable throughout the volume."

DIVINE IMMANENCE. An Essay on the Spiritual Significance of Matter. 8vo. [Shortly.]

Jacob (Rev. J. A.)—BUILDING IN SILENCE, and other Sermons. Extra fcap. 8vo. 6s.

James (Rev. Herbert).—THE COUNTRY CLERGYMAN AND HIS WORK. Crown 8vo. 6s.

ROCK.—"There is in Mr. James's style a quaintness and aphoristic method, which drives the nail in penetratingly and clinches it durably. . . . In short, Mr. James has condensed into this little volume and these half-dozen lectures the fruitful experience of forty years, and every page is filled with judicious and earnest advice. We heartily recommend the book."

RECORD.—"The volume is one which should be in the hands of every candidate for Holy Orders and of every clergyman who is wishing to learn. These lectures are distinguished by their thoroughly practical character. No words are wasted, the reader's mind is confronted with the difficulty or the remedy, stated in the plainest possible terms. . . . We have said enough to show that this volume abounds in thoughtful suggestions, which deserve to be pondered and put into practice."

Jayne (F. J., Bishop of Chester).—THE VISITATION OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD. A Charge delivered to the Clergy of the Diocese at his third Visitation, October 29, 1896. 6d.

Jeans (Rev. G. E.)—HAILEYBURY CHAPEL, and other Sermons. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Jellett (Rev. Dr.)—

THE ELDER SON, and other Sermons. Crown 8vo. 6s.

THE EFFICACY OF PRAYER. 3rd Edition. Crown 8vo. 5s.

Joceline (E.)—THE MOTHER'S LEGACIE TO HER UNBORN CHILD. Cr. 16mo. 4s. 6d.

Kellogg (Rev. S. H.)—THE LIGHT OF ASIA AND THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

THE GENESIS AND GROWTH OF RELIGION. Cr. 8vo. 6s.

SCOTSMAN.—"Full of matter of an important kind, set forth with praiseworthy conciseness, and at the same time with admirable lucidity. . . . Dr. Kellogg has done the work allotted to him with great ability, and everywhere manifests a competent acquaintance with the subject with which he deals."

Kingsley (Charles)—

VILLAGE AND TOWN AND COUNTRY SERMONS. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

THE WATER OF LIFE, and other Sermons. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

SERMONS ON NATIONAL SUBJECTS, AND THE KING OF THE EARTH. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

SERMONS FOR THE TIMES. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

GOOD NEWS OF GOD. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

THE GOSPEL OF THE PENTATEUCH, AND DAVID. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

DISCIPLINE, and other Sermons. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

WESTMINSTER SERMONS. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

ALL SAINTS' DAY, and other Sermons. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

ACADEMY.—"We can imagine nothing more appropriate than this edition for a public, a school, or even a village library."

Kirkpatrick (Prof. A. F.)—THE DIVINE LIBRARY OF THE OLD TESTAMENT. Its Origin, Preservation, Inspiration, and Permanent Value. Crown 8vo. 3s. net.

THE DOCTRINE OF THE PROPHETS. Warburtonian Lectures 1886-1890. 2nd Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Knight (W. A.)—ASPECTS OF THEISM. 8vo. 8s. 6d.

Lightfoot (Bishop)—

LEADERS IN THE NORTHERN CHURCH: Sermons Preached in the Diocese of Durham. 2nd Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.

ORDINATION ADDRESSES AND COUNSELS TO CLERGY. Crown 8vo. 6s.

CAMBRIDGE SERMONS. Crown 8vo. 6s.

SERMONS PREACHED IN ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Lightfoot (Bishop)—continued.

SERMONS PREACHED ON SPECIAL OCCASIONS. Crown 8vo. 6s.

A CHARGE DELIVERED TO THE CLERGY OF THE DIOCESE OF DURHAM, 25th Nov. 1886. Demy 8vo. 2s.

ESSAYS ON THE WORK ENTITLED "Supernatural Religion." 8vo. 10s. 6d.

DISSERTATIONS ON THE APOSTOLIC AGE. 8vo. 14s.

BIBLICAL ESSAYS. 8vo. 12s.

TIMES.—"As representing all that is now available of the Bishop's profound learning and consummate scholarship for the illustration of his great subject, the present volume and its successor will be warmly welcomed by all students of theology."

Maclaren (Rev. Alexander)—

SERMONS PREACHED AT MANCHESTER. 11th Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

A SECOND SERIES OF SERMONS. 7th Ed. Fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

A THIRD SERIES. 6th Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

WEEK-DAY EVENING ADDRESSES. 4th Ed. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

THE SECRET OF POWER, AND OTHER SERMONS. Fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

Macmillan (Rev. Hugh)—

BIBLE TEACHINGS IN NATURE. 15th Ed. Globe 8vo. 6s.

THE TRUE VINE; OR, THE ANALOGIES OF OUR LORD'S ALLEGORY. 5th Edition. Globe 8vo. 6s.

THE MINISTRY OF NATURE. 8th Edition. Globe 8vo. 6s.

THE SABBATH OF THE FIELDS. 6th Edition. Globe 8vo. 6s.

THE MARRIAGE IN CANA. Globe 8vo. 6s.

TWO WORLDS ARE OURS. 3rd Edition. Globe 8vo. 6s.

THE OLIVE LEAF. Globe 8vo. 6s.

THE GATE BEAUTIFUL AND OTHER BIBLE TEACHINGS FOR THE YOUNG. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

SPEAKER.—"These addresses are, in fact, models of their kind—wise, reverent, and not less imaginative than practical; they abound in choice and apposite anecdotes and illustrations, and possess distinct literary merit."

SCOTSMAN.—"Written in a style that is both simple and charming. Children and the teachers of children will alike find the book full of wholesome food for reflection."

SCOTTISH LEADER.—"Dr. Macmillan's vivid presentation in simple language of the facts of nature, and his adaptation of them to illustrate the facts of spiritual life, make the book at once interesting and profitable to all its readers."

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"The subjects and the mode of treatment are quite out of the common groove. Dr. Macmillan at once fixes the attention with some point of interest, some familiar teaching of nature, or some striking fact of history or social life, and weaves about his subject in the most natural and attractive fashion, the religious lessons he desires to convey. . . . The poetic touch that beautifies all Dr. Macmillan's writing is fresh in every one of these charming addresses. The volume is sure to meet with cordial appreciation far beyond the sphere of its origin."

DUBLIN MAIL.—"A beautiful present for thoughtful young readers."

Mahaffy (Rev. Prof.)—THE DECAY OF MODERN PREACHING: AN ESSAY. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Mathews (S.).—THE SOCIAL TEACHING OF JESUS.
AN ESSAY IN CHRISTIAN SOCIOLOGY. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Maurice (Frederick Denison).—

THE KINGDOM OF CHRIST. 3rd Ed. 2 Vols. Cr. 8vo. 12s.
SERMONS PREACHED IN COUNTRY CHURCHES. 2nd Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.

THE CONSCIENCE. Lectures on Casuistry. 3rd Ed. Cr. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

DIALOGUES ON FAMILY WORSHIP. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

THE DOCTRINE OF SACRIFICE DEDUCED FROM THE SCRIPTURES. 2nd Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.

THE RELIGIONS OF THE WORLD. 6th Edition. Cr. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

ON THE SABBATH DAY; THE CHARACTER OF THE WARRIOR; AND ON THE INTERPRETATION OF HISTORY. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

LEARNING AND WORKING. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

THE LORD'S PRAYER, THE CREED, AND THE COM-MANDMENTS. Pott 8vo. 1s.

Collected Works. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. each.

SERMONS PREACHED IN LINCOLN'S INN CHAPEL. In Six Volumes. 3s. 6d. each.

CHRISTMAS DAY AND OTHER SERMONS.

THEOLOGICAL ESSAYS.

PROPHETS AND KINGS.

PATRIARCHS AND LAWGIVERS.

THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN.

GOSPEL OF ST. JOHN.

EPISTLE OF ST. JOHN.

LECTURES ON THE APOCALYPSE.

FRIENDSHIP OF BOOKS.

SOCIAL MORALITY.

PRAYER BOOK AND LORD'S PRAYER.

THE DOCTRINE OF SACRIFICE.

THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES.

CHURCH TIMES.—"There is probably no writer of the present century to whom the English Church owes a deeper debt of gratitude. . . . Probably he did more to stop the stream of converts to Romanism which followed the secession of Newman than any other individual, by teaching English Churchmen to think out the reasonableness of their position."

SPEAKER.—"These sermons are marked in a conspicuous degree by high thinking and plain statement."

TIMES.—"A volume of sermons for which the memory of Maurice's unique personal influence ought to secure a cordial reception."

SCOTSMAN.—"They appear in a volume uniform with the recent collective edition of Maurice's works, and will be welcome to the many readers to whom that edition has brought home the teaching of the most popular among modern English divines."

Milligan (Rev. Prof. W.)—THE RESURRECTION OF OUR LORD. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo. 5s.

SPECTATOR.—"The argument is put with brevity and force by Dr. Milligan, and every page bears witness that he has mastered the literature of the subject, and has made a special study of the more recent discussions on this aspect of the question. . . . The remaining lectures are more theological. They abound in striking views, in fresh and vigorous exegesis, and manifest a keen apprehension of the bearing of the fact of the Resurrection on many important questions of theology. The notes are able and scholarly, and elucidate the teaching of the text."

THE ASCENSION AND HEAVENLY PRIESTHOOD OF OUR LORD. Baird Lectures, 1891. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Moorhouse (J., Bishop of Manchester)—

JACOB: Three Sermons. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

THE TEACHING OF CHRIST. Its Conditions, Secret, and Results. Crown 8vo. 3s. net.

CHURCH WORK: ITS MEANS AND METHODS. Crown 8vo. 3s. net.

CHURCH TIMES.—"It may almost be said to mark an epoch, and to inaugurate a new era in the history of Episcopal visitation."

TIMES.—"A series of diocesan addresses, full of practical counsel, by one of the most active and sagacious of modern prelates."

GLOBE.—"Throughout the volume we note the presence of the wisdom that comes from long and varied experience, from sympathy, and from the possession of a fair and tolerant mind."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"Full of interest and instruction for all who take an interest in social and moral, to say nothing of ecclesiastical, reforms, and deserves to find careful students far beyond the limits of those to whom it was originally addressed."

Myers (F. W. H.)—SCIENCE AND A FUTURE LIFE. Gl. 8vo. 5s.

Nash (H. S.)—GENESIS OF THE SOCIAL CONSCIENCE. THE RELATION BETWEEN THE ESTABLISHMENT OF CHRISTIANITY IN EUROPE AND THE SOCIAL QUESTION. Crown 8vo. 6s.

SCOTSMAN.—"The book is eloquently, and at times brilliantly, written. . . . But few readers could go through it without being inspired by its clever and animated handling of philosophical ideas."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"An interesting and suggestive little book."

Pattison (Mark).—SERMONS. Crown 8vo. 6s.

PHILOCHRISTUS. Memoirs of a Disciple of the Lord. 3rd Ed. 8vo. 12s.

Plumptre (Dean).—MOVEMENTS IN RELIGIOUS THOUGHT. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

REASONABLE FAITH: A Short Religious Essay for the Times. By "Three Friends." Crown 8vo. 1s.

Rendall (Rev. F.)—THE THEOLOGY OF THE HEBREW CHRISTIANS. Crown 8vo. 5s.

Reynolds (H. R.)—NOTES OF THE CHRISTIAN LIFE. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Ridding (George, Bishop of Southwell).—THE REVEL AND THE BATTLE. Crown 8vo. 6s.

TIMES.—"Singularity well worth reading."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"Marked by dignity and force."

Robinson (Prebendary H. G.)—MAN IN THE IMAGE OF GOD, and other Sermons. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Ryle (H. E.)—PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND THE FIRST CHAPTER OF GENESIS. A Sermon preached at St. Luke's Church, Liverpool, on Sunday, September 20, 1896, on the occasion of the visit of the Royal Association to Liverpool. 1s. net.

Salmon (Rev. George, D.D., Provost of Trinity College, Dublin)—NON-MIRACULOUS CHRISTIANITY, and other Sermons. 2nd Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.

GNOSTICISM AND AGNOSTICISM, and other Sermons. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Seeley (Sir J. R.)—ECCE HOMO : A Survey of the Life and Work of Jesus Christ. Globe 8vo. 5s.

NATURAL RELIGION. Globe 8vo. 5s.

ATHENÆUM.—"If it be the function of a genius to interpret the age to itself, this is a work of genius. It gives articulate expression to the higher strivings of the time. It puts plainly the problem of these latter days, and so far contributes to its solution; a positive solution it scarcely claims to supply. No such important contribution to the question of the time has been published in England since the appearance in 1866 of Ecce Homo. . . . The author is a teacher whose words it is well to listen to; his words are wise but sad; it has not been given him to fire them with faith, but only to light them with reason. His readers may at least thank him for the intellectual illumination, if they cannot owe him gratitude for any added favour. . . . A book which we assume will be read by most thinking Englishmen."

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"This is one of those rare things in our modern literature—a really speculative book; and the speculation, whatever else we may think of it, is both ingenious and serious. It is work in the region, not of dogmas or controversies, but of ideas."

SCOTSMAN.—"In working out his conception of Natural Religion, the author speaks with admirable force, and occasionally with sarcasm and humour, which blend with passages of considerable literary skill."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"The present issue is a compact, handy, well-printed edition of a thoughtful and remarkable book."

Service (Rev. John)—SERMONS. With Portrait. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Stanley (Dean)—

THE NATIONAL THANKSGIVING. Sermons preached in Westminster Abbey. 2nd Edition. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Stewart (Prof. Balfour) and Tait (Prof. P. G.)—THE UNSEEN UNIVERSE; OR, PHYSICAL SPECULATIONS ON A FUTURE STATE. 15th Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.

PARADOXICAL PHILOSOPHY : A Sequel to "The Unseen Universe." Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Stubbs (Dean)—

CHRISTUS IMPERATOR. A Series of Lecture-Sermons on the Universal Empire of Christianity. Edited by Very Rev. C. W. STUBBS, D.D., Dean of Ely. Crown 8vo. 6s.

The discourses included in this volume were delivered in 1893 in the Chapel-of-Ease to the Parish Church of Wavertree—at that time the centre of much excellent social work done by Mr. Stubbs, who had not yet been promoted to the Deanery of Ely. The following are the subjects and the preachers :—The Supremacy of Christ in all Realms : by the Very Rev. Charles Stubbs, D.D., Dean of Ely.—Christ in the Realm of History : by the Very Rev. G. W. Kitchen, D.D., Dean of Durham.—Christ in the Realm of Philosophy: by the Rev. R. E. Bartlett, M.A., Bampton Lecturer in 1888.—Christ in the Realm of Law: by the Rev. J. B. Heard, M.A., Hulsean Lecturer in 1893.—Christ in the Realm of Art: by the Rev. Canon Rawsley, M.A., Vicar of Crosthwaite.—Christ in the Realm of Ethics: by the Rev. J. Llewelyn Davies, D.D., Vicar of Kirkby Lonsdale, and Chaplain to the Queen.—Christ in the Realm of Politics: by the Rev. and Hon. W. H. Freemantle, M.A., Canon of Canterbury.—Christ in the Realm of Science: by the Rev. Brooke Lambert, B.C.L., Vicar of Greenwich.—Christ in the Realm of Sciology: by the Rev. S. A. Barnett, M.A., Warden of Toynbee Hall, and Canon of Bristol.—Christ in the Realm of Poetry: by the Very Rev. Charles Stubbs, D.D., Dean of Ely.

SCOTSMAN.—"Their prelections will be found stimulating and instructive in a high degree. The volume deserves recognition as a courageous attempt to give to Christianity its rightful place and power in the lives of its professors."

GLASGOW HERALD.—"This is a very interesting and even in some respects a notable book. It might almost be regarded as the manifesto of an important party in the Church of England."

Trench (Archbishop).—HULSEAN LECTURES. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Van Dyke (Henry).—THE GOSPEL FOR AN AGE OF DOUBT. The Yale Lectures on Preaching, 1896. Cr. 8vo. 8s. 6d.

SCOTSMAN.—"While the lectures are in no danger of being challenged as heterodox, the last charge that will be made against the author will be that he fails to discern the spirit of the age or the attitude of mind, and the outstanding reasons of that attitude, of multitudes of thoughtful and reverent people towards the teaching of the Churches."

Vaughan (C. J., Dean of Llandaff).—

MEMORIALS OF HARROW SUNDAYS. 5th Edition. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

HEROES OF FAITH. 2nd Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.

LIFE'S WORK AND GOD'S DISCIPLINE. 3rd Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

THE WHOLESOME WORDS OF JESUS CHRIST. 2nd Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

FOES OF FAITH. 2nd Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

COUNSELS FOR YOUNG STUDENTS. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

THE TWO GREAT TEMPTATIONS. 2nd Ed. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

ADDRESSES FOR YOUNG CLERGYMEN. Extra fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

"MY SON, GIVE ME THINE HEART." Extra fcap. 8vo. 5s.

REST AWHILE. Addresses to Toilers in the Ministry. Extra fcap. 8vo. 5s.

TEMPLE SERMONS. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

AUTHORISED OR REVISED? Sermons on some of the Texts in which the Revised Version differs from the Authorised. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Vaughan (C. J., Dean of Llandaff)—continued.

LESSONS OF THE CROSS AND PASSION. WORDS FROM THE CROSS. THE REIGN OF SIN. THE LORD'S PRAYER. Four Courses of Lent Lectures. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

UNIVERSITY SERMONS. NEW AND OLD. Cr. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

NOTES FOR LECTURES ON CONFIRMATION. Fcap. 8vo. 1s. 6d.

THE PRAYERS OF JESUS CHRIST: a closing volume of Lent Lectures delivered in the Temple Church. Globe 8vo. 3s. 6d.

DONCASTER SERMONS. Lessons of Life and Godliness, and Words from the Gospels. Cr. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

RESTFUL THOUGHTS IN RESTLESS TIMES. Cr. 8vo. 5s.

LAST WORDS IN THE TEMPLE CHURCH. Globe 8vo. 5s.

TIMES.—"A volume of sermons for which the title and the name of the preacher will speak more than any recommendation of ours."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"The whole volume will be very welcome to Dr. Vaughan's many admirers."

SATURDAY REVIEW.—"These discourses in thought, in style, have so much that is permanent and fine about them that they will stand the ordeal of being read by any serious man, even though he never heard Dr. Vaughan speak."

LEEDS MERCURY.—"Are such as only one possessed of his great ability, varied attainments, and rich experience could have produced."

UNIVERSITY AND OTHER SERMONS. Crown 8vo. 6s.

TIMES.—"As specimens of pure and rhythmical English prose, rising here and there to flights of sober and chastened eloquence, yet withal breathing throughout an earnest and devotional spirit, these sermons would be hard to match."

SCOTSMAN.—"All are marked by the earnestness, scholarship, and strength of thought which invariably characterised the pulpit utterances of the preacher."

Vaughan (Rev. D. J.)—THE PRESENT TRIAL OF FAITH.

Crown 8vo. 5s.

QUESTIONS OF THE DAY, SOCIAL, NATIONAL, AND RELIGIOUS. Crown 8vo. 5s.

NATIONAL OBSERVER.—"In discussing Questions of the Day Mr. D. J. Vaughan speaks with candour, ability, and common sense."

SCOTSMAN.—"They form an altogether admirable collection of vigorous and thoughtful pronouncements on a variety of social, national, and religious topics."

GLASGOW HERALD.—"A volume such as this is the best reply to those friends of the people who are for ever complaining that the clergy waste their time preaching antiquated dogma and personal salvation, and neglect the weightier matters of the law."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"He speaks boldly as well as thoughtfully, and what he has to say is always worthy of attention."

EXPOSITORY TIMES.—"Most of them are social, and these are the most interesting. And one feature of peculiar interest is that in those sermons which were preached twenty years ago Canon Vaughan saw the questions of to-day, and suggested the remedies we are beginning to apply."

Vaughan (Rev. E. T.)—SOME REASONS OF OUR CHRISTIAN HOPE. Hulsean Lectures for 1875. Crown 8vo. 6s. 6d.

Venn (Rev. John).—ON SOME CHARACTERISTICS OF BELIEF, SCIENTIFIC AND RELIGIOUS. 8vo. 6s. 6d.

Ward (W.).—WITNESSES TO THE UNSEEN, AND OTHER ESSAYS. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"Mr. Ward's reputation as a philosophical thinker at once accurate, candid, and refined, and as the master of a literary style alike vigorous, scholarly, and popular, has been amply established by his previous works. That it is well worthy of his reputation, is enough to say in commendation of his new book."

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"His whole book recalls men to those witnesses for the unseen, which laboratories cannot analyse, yet which are abundantly rational."

TIMES.—"A series of brilliant and suggestive essays. . . . This pregnant and suggestive view of the larger intellectual tendencies of our own and other ages is enforced and illustrated by Mr. Ward with much speculative insight and great literary brilliancy."

Welldon (Rev. J. E. C.)—THE SPIRITUAL LIFE, and other Sermons. Crown 8vo. 6s.

SCOTTISH LEADER.—"In a strain of quiet, persuasive eloquence, Mr. Welldon treats impressively of various aspects of the higher life. His discourses cannot fail both to enrich the heart and stimulate the mind of the earnest reader."

GLASGOW HERALD.—"They are cultured, reverent, and thoughtful productions."

Westcott (B. F., Bishop of Durham)—

ON THE RELIGIOUS OFFICE OF THE UNIVERSITIES.

Sermons. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

GIFTS FOR MINISTRY. Addresses to Candidates for Ordination. Crown 8vo. 1s. 6d.

THE VICTORY OF THE CROSS. Sermons preached during Holy Week, 1888, in Hereford Cathedral. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

FROM STRENGTH TO STRENGTH. Three Sermons (In Memoriam J. B. D.) Crown 8vo. 2s.

THE REVELATION OF THE RISEN LORD. Cr. 8vo. 6s.

THE HISTORIC FAITH. 3rd Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.

THE GOSPEL OF THE RESURRECTION. 6th Ed. Cr. 8vo. 6s.

THE REVELATION OF THE FATHER. Crown 8vo. 6s.

CHRISTUS CONSUMMATOR. 2nd Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.

SOME THOUGHTS FROM THE ORDINAL. Cr. 8vo. 1s. 6d.

SOCIAL ASPECTS OF CHRISTIANITY. Crown 8vo. 6s.

ESSAYS IN THE HISTORY OF RELIGIOUS THOUGHT IN THE WEST. Globe 8vo. 5s.

THE GOSPEL OF LIFE. Cr. 8vo. 6s.

THE INCARNATION AND COMMON LIFE. Crown 8vo. 9s.

TIMES.—"A collection of sermons which possess, among other merits, the rare one of actuality, reflecting, as they frequently do, the Bishop's well-known and eager interest in social problems of the day."

CHRISTIAN ASPECTS OF LIFE. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

The subject is dealt with under the following heads:—I. THE NATIONAL CHURCH. II. FOREIGN MISSIONS. III. EDUCATION. IV. SOCIAL SCIENCE. V. SOCIAL RELATIONSHIPS.

LITERATURE.—"A sermon of the national day of rest, and some attractive personal reminiscences of school days under James Prince Lee, are among the choicest parts of the volume, if we are to single out any portions from a work of dignified and valuable utterance."

DAILY NEWS.—"Through every page . . . runs the same enlightened sympathy with the living world. One forgets the Bishop in the Man, the Ecclesiastic in the Citizen, the Churchman in the Christian."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"Of a long series of volumes published by thy Bishop of Durham there is perhaps none more characteristic or more likely to be widely welcomed than the last, entitled Christian Aspects of Life."

White (A. D.)—A HISTORY OF THE WARFARE OF SCIENCE WITH THEOLOGY IN CHRISTENDOM. In Two Vols. 8vo. 21s. net.

TIMES.—"Is certainly one of the most comprehensive, and, in our judgment, one of the most valuable historical works that have appeared for many years. . . . He has chosen a large subject, but it is at least one which has clear and definite limits, and he has treated it very fully and comprehensively in two moderate volumes. . . . His book appears to us to be based on much original research, on an enormous amount of careful, accurate, and varied reading, and his habit of appending to each section a list of the chief books, both ancient and modern, relating to it will be very useful to serious students. He has decided opinions, but he always writes temperately, and with transparent truthfulness of intention."

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"The story of the struggle of searchers after truth with the organised forces of ignorance, bigotry, and superstition is the most inspiring chapter in the whole history of mankind. That story has never been better told than by the ex-President of Cornell University in these two volumes."

Wickham (Very Rev. Dean)—WELLINGTON COLLEGE
SERMONS. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Wilkins (Prof. A. S.)—THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD: an Essay. 2nd Edition. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Williamson (M. B.)—THE TRUTH AND THE WITNESS.
Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

BRITISH WEEKLY.—"A thoughtful little treatise."

SCOTSMAN.—"All who read it will recognise its learning, its power of subtle thought, and the philosophical spirit in which it approaches the consideration of its topics."

Wilson (J. M., Archdeacon of Manchester)—
SERMONS PREACHED IN CLIFTON COLLEGE CHAPEL.
Second Series. 1888-90. Crown 8vo. 6s.

ESSAYS AND ADDRESSES. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d. net.

This work, a new edition of which has been called for, deals exclusively with principles. It cannot, therefore, be out of date, and the author, in revising it for the press, has not found it necessary to make any alterations. The subjects are:—Water—Some Properties and Peculiarities of it; a Chapter in Natural Theology; Morality in Public Schools, and its Relation to Religion—A Fragment; The Need of giving Higher Biblical Teaching and Instruction on the Fundamental Questions of Religion and Christianity; The Theory of Inspiration, or, Why Men do not Believe the Bible; Letter to a Bristol Artisan; The Limits of Authority and Free Thought; Church Authority: Its Meaning and Value; Christian Evidences; Miracles; Evolution: An Elementary Lecture; Fundamental Church Principles; Roman Stoicism as a Religion.

GUARDIAN.—"We heartily welcome a new edition of Archdeacon Wilson's Essays and Addresses."

SPEAKER.—"We are glad to welcome a new edition of the Archdeacon of Manchester's Essays and Addresses. . . . These addresses are manly, straightforward, and sagacious; and they are, moreover, pervaded with a deep sense of responsibility and unfailing enthusiasm."

SOME CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE RELIGIOUS THOUGHT
OF OUR TIME. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Wood (C. J.) SURVIVALS IN CHRISTIANITY. Cr. 8vo. 6s.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"Striking, stimulating and suggestive lectures. . . . The author writes with the boldness and conviction of a mystic; he brings wide reading to bear upon every branch of his subject, and his book is impressive and interesting throughout."

DATE DUE

--	--	--

THE KING'S LIBRARY

3000027801

